WALKER STORE FIXTURES
—Attract Good Trade—

There is so much to be said to the merchant about to buy new fixtures that we prefer to send our catalogue, which will set him wise on many points that he should know. Our designs and our workmanship are unsurpassed. Our customers write that they are more than pleased with the appearance of their stores.

WE KNOW HOW TO DESIGN ARTISTIC INTERIORS

We are ready at all times to offer suggestions covering any detail. And our catalogue is sufficiently explicit to make it both interesting and instructive. Send for it.

Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Co.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

No Friends Among the Wheelwrights

Wheelwrights don't think much of the "J. M." delivery wagon; it doesn't make enough money for them. No wagon pays fewer visits to the repair shop, or makes its visits shorter.

The most celebrated delivery wagon made—the best wagon ever built for the grocery trade. Strong as iron, yet easy-running; finest steel tires, and wheels from second-growth hickory.

COFFEE AND TEA BINS THAT PROVE THEIR "METAL"

Picture your store fitted out with Tea Canisters and Coffee Bins like these. They are trade winners. Effective store decoration brings the people in—your sales force do the rest.

When installing Coffee Bins, get the kind that will stand the racket—you'll never have to replace them. Our bins are constructed of the heaviest tin.

And for Over Fifty Years They Have Proven Their "Metal"

Easter Hams

Will be in demand in a short time

Have you placed your order for them? When you read this it will be time to seriously think of the matter. Write and ask for quotations on which are plump, have short shanks and round butts, are sweet, being sugar cured; mild, because they are not old; and of fine flavor, being smoked a nice, bright color, which is only possible by using hickory wood.

They are sold by the leading retail grocers in Philadelphia, having the most select and exacting trade.

Burk's "Butternut Bacon"

is the only substitute for Easter hams. It is selected from corn-fed hogs, specially cured with granulated sugar—mild and of exquisite flavor and taste.

It is put up in narrow strips, strung with white cord, cut absolutely square, making any waste impossible; wrapped in highly glazed and parchment paper and embellished on two sides with an attractive blue and white label. A red seal is attached to the cord, stating the specific merits of this bacon, which is also known to the trade as the "Five B" Bacon, because of its name

Are You In a Rut?

The retail merchant who is doing a credit business in the old way, charging goods on Pass Book, Day Book and Ledger, then making out statements for each account, is in a rut, and simply wearing his life away. If he continues to exist at all it is at best a hand-to-mouth process.

What he needs to take him out of this rut is to put in a "Kirkwood Short-Account" System and begin to enjoy an energetic and prosperous mercantile existence.

With one writing you give customer itemized bill for goods bought, statement of account to date and post your own Books. No books to post, no disputes with customers, accounts always posted.

This System will pay for itself every month and the price is so low that you cannot afford to be without it. For samples and prices, write

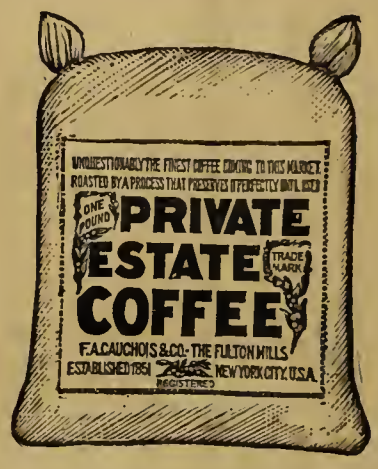
After getting all the business on Freihofer's Bread we could possibly take care of, we sighed for other worlds to conquer, and started to make Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels.

These goods are fit mates for Freihofer's Bread, and most grocers know what that is. We have done little or no advertising to consumers for them, preferring to spend that money with the grocer to make him friendly to us and really anxious to sell our goods.



So that every case contains Universal Coupons, which will buy any necessity or luxury a grocer can want.

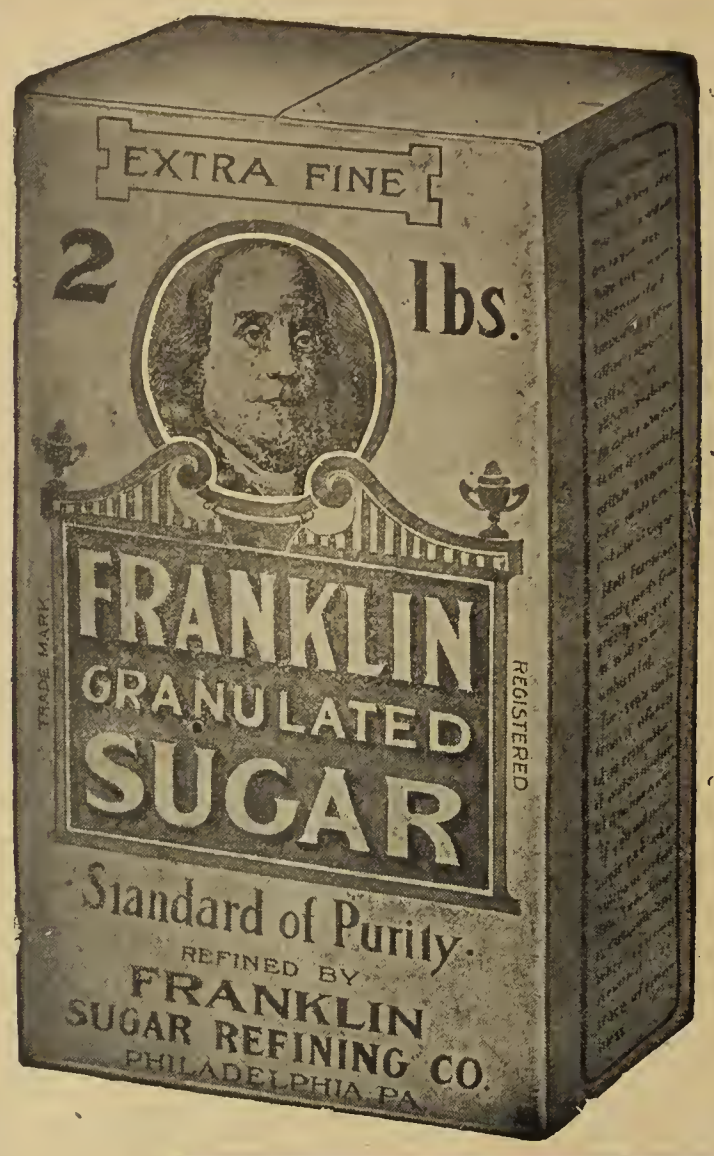
Don't You Personally Like GOOD Light ?



¶ When you're considering the question of a well-lighted store forget your customers for a minute. Think of yourself. Isn't it pleasanter to do your work in a flood of light than in a dim, dark place, full of shadows and of gloom?

Everybody likes the light, everybody hates the dark, especially in a store. Even business likes the light and hates the dark.

We don't contend that the minute you put more lights in your store new customers will come in and say: "Now that your store is light we'll deal with you."

But it will make an impression as sure as you live, the sort of an impression that makes all the difference between success and failure.

What the Prophet Says

A man with some reputation as a prophet says the grocery store of the future will sell absolutely no goods in bulk.

Naturally, excepting produce.

No weighing, no measuring, no grubbing.

Everything in ready-weighed, ready-wrapped packages, saving the dealer work, saving him overweight, saving him dirt and beautifying his shelves—giving the consumer clean food in sanitary sealed packages, uncontaminable by other things.

We believe it. A most surprising percentage of our granulated sugar business is done to-day in Franklin Cartons. Every year sees an increase. Moreover, the carton business we get we keep. For no grocer who once started to sell Franklin Carton Sugar has ever been known to go back to barrels.

Clean, sanitary cartons that preserve strength and freshness. Two-pound cartons and 2, 5, 10, 25, 50 and 100-pound cotton bags : : :

Only One In Fifteen's A "Star"

By no means are all the hams we produce good enough to be branded Star.

We turn out 40,000 hams a day. There isn't a bad ham in the lot—rigid selection of hogs assures that; but only one out of about fifteen is fine and tender enough to bear the Star brand. The rest are good hams; but they are not Star hams.

The Star ham is from a young, but mature, corn-fed hog—not too fat. The meat is solid, sweet, tender and juicy—the ham to burn into the memory the name of the grocer who sold it.

What is a Cash Grocery Business?

Question Supplies the Basis for a Pennsylvania Lawsuit Between the Prospective Buyer and the Prospective Seller of a Business so Described. Court Says Cash Business Need Not Necessarily be One Done for Spot Cash, and Refuses to Return Buyer's Deposit Money.

The question as to what is and what is not a cash grocery business has just been decided by the Common Pleas Court of Montgomery County, Pa., in an action brought between two men, one of whom was to have sold and the other to have bought a retail grocery business described by the seller as a "cash business." The plaintiff, who was the prospective buyer, was named Hartman, and the defendant, the prospective seller, Boogar.

On June 9, 1904, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a written agreement by which defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff the fixtures of his grocery store, located at Conshohocken, for the sum of $1,300, $1,000 to be paid on the signing of the agreement. The plaintiff also agreed to buy the stock of goods on hand on day of settlement. Plaintiff paid down the $1,000, and sued to recover it back, claiming that he rescinded the contract before the time for its completion because of the "untrue, false and fraudulent representations" as to the character of the business made by the defendant, and which were the essential and moving causes which induced him to enter into said agreement.

The written agreement contained no representation as to the character or kind of business, nor does it speak of any penalty for default of either party.

The false and fraudulent representations upon which the plaintiff relied consisted in the statement made by defendant before the contract was signed that he was doing a "cash business" with the exception of two accounts. The following conversation took place when the parties met to take an account of stock. The plaintiff testified: "I said to him then, when he told me he would take orders on Thursdays and deliver the goods and collect on Fridays and Saturdays, 'I am done.' He said, 'What's the matter?' I said, 'This is not what you represented; you represented to me a strictly cash business with the exception of two people I have named before in Conshohocken and one railroad man. Now, you go out and take orders to-morrow and deliver the goods and collect the latter part of the week.' He said, 'That is cash.' I said, 'Not by any means.' 'Yes it is,' he said."

Mr. Perkins, a witness called by plaintiff, testified that he had been in the grocery business for about twenty-six years. He was asked: "Where a grocer sells to consumers goods on Mondays or Tuesdays and delivers them and collects on Fridays or Saturdays for those same goods, is that considered in the trade a cash business?" He answered: "I think it largely a matter of opinion, if it is opinion you want from me."

On cross-examination, he was asked: "Where you sell your customer gives an order for goods and they are delivered, and they are paid for, not right at the time of delivery, but within a few days, is that or not in the trade and according to the custom of merchants a cash business?" His answer was: "We consider it is so in our business."

The question which the suit brought before the court for settlement was therefore this: Does a cash business mean only a business which is conducted for spot cash, over the counter, or C. O. D. when the goods are delivered, or does the expression cash business allow any more latitude than that? The court decided that the business as described by Mr. Boogar could truthfully be called a cash business, because it was so understood in the trade. It was further decided that because it was a cash business the buyer had no right to break his contract and withdraw, and because he did withdraw illegally he could not get back the $1,000 he had paid as a deposit.

The court's opinion in part was as follows:—

The extent of plaintiff's testimony shows that goods were sold on Tuesdays or Fridays and paid on Saturdays. To the common understanding this would mean cash. No books of account were kept, and the plaintiff's solicitors were responsible for loss. It is common usage in this business to sell as defendant did; and it is inconceivable that plaintiff should have thought that in a manufacturing town, where employees of the mills and factories are paid on Saturdays, that he could carry on a grocery business if he required the money paid on delivery of the goods. "The usages of a particular trade or business are presumed to be known to those engaged therein:" Carter vs. Philadelphia Coal Co., 77 Pa. 286.

The evidence, in our opinion, did not establish fraud on the part of the defendant. At most there was a difference of opinion between the parties as to what was meant by a "cash business," as is shown by defendant's exclamation, "that is cash." Each party relies solely on his own construction of the meaning of the words used by defendant. There may be an honest difference of opinion.

Fraud in fact is a matter of intention; and where the expression "cash sales" may admit of different construction, there can be no fraud in the absence of other circumstances showing an intention to deceive. The fact that defendant kept no books, that his solicitor was responsible for orders delivered, and the universal custom to pay within a few days, confirm defendant's idea that his business was really in fact a cash business as understood by the trade.

If plaintiff had reason for rescinding because of any act of defendant, this claim could be sustained; but here we have a case where plaintiff's withdrawal was not justified, and under such circumstances the authorities are that he can recover nothing.

What Carelessness in Figuring Profits Lead To?

Western Grocer Gives Twelve Examples in Every One of Which There Was Either No Profit or Much Less than the Dealer Thought.

A well-known retail grocer of Seattle, Wash., has made a public statement that many a retail grocer, so careless is he in the matter of figuring profits, is actually selling at a loss goods that he thinks he is realizing a profit upon. To substantiate his statement he has made some calculations, which the "Grocery World" reproduces below:—

Best patent flours at present cost per barrel $5.15. The average cost of doing business in this city is 17 per cent., or per barrel, 88 cents; total cost, $6.03. Retailed at $1.50 per sack, $6.00. Loss per barrel, 3 cents.

It will be seen by this that grocers are selling flour at a loss of 3 cents per barrel, when cost of doing business is considered. Yet some grocers try to make themselves believe that they could sell for less and make profit.

Best cane sugar at present cost per sack, $5.65; cost of delivery, 3 cents; total, $5.68; less discount of cash 25 cents; total, $5.43. The average cost of doing business, 17 per cent., is 93 cents. Total cost, $6.36.

Sold at 15 pounds for $1, the prevailing price, amounts to $6.67, or a margin of 31 cents on a sack of sugar.

Deduct from this the full sacks that are sold at $5.65 to $6, and sugar is handled without profit. Condensed milk costs per case, $4.05, less discount for cash, 2 per cent., 8 cents; total, $3.97.

The average cost of doing business is 17 per cent. or per case, 67 cents; total cost, $4.64; 48 cans to case, sold at 10 cents per can, $4.80; margin of profit, 16 cents.

Deduct from this the cases sold at $4.40 and $4.50, and condensed milk pays no profit above the cost of business. Yet there are some grocers so foolish that they are trying to make their business pay by selling condensed milk at 3 cans for 25 cents or $4 per case, that costs them, when cost of doing business is considered, $4.64. Is it any wonder that such grocers generally wind up in bankruptcy?

Standard tomatoes now cost, per case, $1.90; the average cost of doing business, 17 per cent., 32 cents; total cost, $2.22; 24 cans retailed at 10 cents per can, $2.40; margin of profit above actual cost of doing business, 18 cents; this would be ¾ cent per can.

Tomatoes are always sold very close to cost. Still we find some grocers selling them at three cans for 25 cents and believe they are making a profit. They argue that because they purchased futures at 85 cents per dozen, or $1.70 per case; to which should be added 14 cents for interest, plus 31 cents for cost of business, making a total cost of $2.15 per case, or a net loss of 15 cents on every case sold at three cans for 25 cents. Interest should always be added in figuring cost of future goods, for the reason that they are actually purchased far in advance of their sale.

Lenox soap costs, per case, $3.20; cost of doing business at 17 per cent., 55 cents; total cost, $3.75; retailed at 6 bars for 25 cents, $4.20.

Margin of profit on 17 sales, 45 cents. Fels-Naptha soap costs, per case, $4.50; cost of doing business at 17 per cent., 76 cents; total, $5.26; sold at 5 cents per bar, $5; actual loss per case, 26 cents.

Quaker Oats cost, per case of 36 packages, $3.80; cost of doing business at 17 per cent., 63 cents; total cost, $4.43; or a possible margin of 1 cent per sale, 7 cents.

Violet Oats cost, per case of 36 packages, $3.75; cost of doing business at 17 per cent., 63 cents; total cost, $4.38; sold at two packages for 25 cents, $4.50; total, 12 cents.

Margin of profit trifle more than 2-3 cents per sale.

Cocoa costs, per pound, 43 cents; cost of doing business, 17 per cent., 7 cents; total cost 50 cents.

Commonly sold at 25 cents per package of ½-pound, 50 cents; no margin of profit.

Best potatoes cost, per ton, $22; cost of doing business at 17 per cent., $3.74; cost of delivery, $1.50; total cost, $27.24.

Sold at an average of $1.35 per 100 pounds, $27; actual loss per ton, 24 cents.

Ordinary ham weighing 12 pounds costs $1.50; shrinkage 10 per cent., 15 cents; cost of doing business, 29 cents; total cost, $1.94.

Sold at 15 cents per pound, $1.80; actual loss, 14 cents.

Florida eggplants range from $1.75 to $2.25 per crate. They are coming in bad order and are selling poorly.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, April 2, 1908.

An amendment to the Weights and Measures Law of the State requiring that the weight or quantity of commodities in containers be stated is pending at the legislative session at Albany. The New York Wholesale Grocers' Association has made a determined effort to defeat the bill. One of the officers said yesterday that the bill is practically dead as the result of the opposition.

Acting on your instructions, your correspondent tried to get a copy of the letter which the secretary of the Wholesale Grocers' Association sent out to the members urging them to work against the bill, but a copy was not to be had. A. H. Beckmann, the secretary, said that the letter was simply intended for the members and so he declined to furnish a copy for publication. Several members who were asked about the letters said that they had received them but had no copy at hand.

T. H. Ormiston, of Austin, Nichols & Co., said that he had made a personal protest against the bill. He said that people buy certain kinds of food by the package and do not ask what is the weight, and as everybody has been satisfied with this method he saw no reason for changing. He said that certain lines sell for 5 or 10 cents, for instance, and people ask for a package at one price or the other and get the worth of their money in that way, which is more convenient for some kinds of trade than to sell by the weight.

Another objection that he urged against the bill was that there are some kinds of food, such as the canned fruits and vegetables, which cannot be stamped with the weight without the risk of having mistakes through no fault of the packers, because of uncertainties of packing and possible evaporation.

These are the grounds of opposition to the bill, it is said, in the letter which Mr. Beckmann sent to the members.

L. J. Callanan, the chairman of the Legislative Committee of the New York Retail Grocers' Union, said that he is opposed to the bill in its present form, as he believes that the word container is too broad. He said that it would be well to have a law requiring that the true weight of cereals and of butter, lard and many other articles should be stamped on packages of various kinds. But he pointed to his tables filled with canned soups and vegetables and said that nobody could guarantee the exact quantity of food in the cans. He said that the packer must leave the work of filling the cans to girls or other employees who may be careless and there will always be some variations from natural causes.

Several representatives of manufacturers and packers repeated to-day a report about meetings held by the wholesale grocers for the purpose of restricting purchases in the immediate future. The representatives of the packing interests are, in some instances, quite positive in saying that the meetings were actually held not only by the jobbers in this city, but by some of those up the State. The idea, as it is explained, is for the jobbers not to buy from first hands except when it is essential for immediate orders, and then only for the quantities needed at the moment. The jobbers are furthermore to buy from one another while any of them have old stock on hand.

The jobbers expect, it is said, that as the result of this policy they will not only be playing a safe and conservative game, but at the same time they will make it possible for some of the first hands to weaken in their notions as to prices, and so jobbers may

Pennsylvania Dried Fruit Case Now Before the Court

Facts Agreed to by Both Parties and Court Will Decide the Law. Case Complicated by Alleged Technical Faults in the Appeal.

The Kephart dried fruit case, of Altoona, Pa., which is to decide for this State the status of fruits bleached with sulphur, has been submitted to the Blair County Court on what is known as a case stated. A case stated is a formal statement of a case in which the facts are agreed to by both sides, and the law is put up to the judge to decide.

The case stated filed in the Kephart matter was as follows:—

And now, to wit, March , 1908, this case being before the court on an appeal from the judgment entered by an Alderman for the recovery of the penalty for the violation of the provisions of an Act of Assembly, and costs, it is agreed by and between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, on one part, and the defendant, C. M. Kephart, on the other part, that the following case be stated for the opinion of the court in the nature of a special verdict; the same to supersede the statement and affidavit of defense heretofore filed in so far as there may be any conflict in the matters therein alleged.

First. The defendant, C. M. Kephart, is a grocer doing business at the corner of Eleventh avenue and Bridge street, in the City of Altoona, County of Blair, State of Pennsylvania, selling at retail only, and on the seventh day of August, 1907, offered for sale, and had in his possession with intent to sell, "unpeeled peaches," which are articles of food.

Second. On the said seventh day of August, 1907, the defendant, C. M. Kephart, sold to the agent of the Commissioner of the Dairy and Food Division of the Department of Agriculture of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, a portion of the said "unpeeled peaches," which were subsequently submitted to a chemical analysis, and which showed that the same had been preserved by the use of sulphur dioxide.

Third. That the peaches sold as aforesaid by the defendant were taken from the box in which they were purchased by the defendant, which said box had a label thereon containing the following directions and instructions: "For the purposes of shipment the peaches contained herein are preserved by the external application of sulphur fuses, which are removable by maceration or soaking in water."

No such label appeared upon the package in which the peaches sold were wrapped or contained when delivered to purchaser.

Fourth. That the analysis made as aforesaid of the said peaches was made without first submitting the same to the process of maceration, as directed on label upon said box.

Fifth. Sulphur dioxide is not native in peaches, but is added as a preservative and is injurious to health.

Sixth. The rules and regulations promulgated for the enforcement of the Act of Congress, approved June 30, 1906, known as "The Food and Drugs Act," permit the use of sulphur dioxide as a preservative in peaches and the amount found in the peaches in this case is less than the amount allowed by such rules and regulations.

Seventh. The defendant purchased said peaches from a dealer residing outside of the State of Pennsylvania, and received a guaranty in writing, signed by the vendor, who resides in the United States, to the effect that the said peaches were not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, and the said peaches were sold and delivered to the defendant in a sealed package. The said guaranty contained the name and address of the vendor.

Eighth. The Commonwealth, contending that the peaches in question were adulterated within the meaning of paragraph five of the Fifth Section of the Act of June 1, 1907, P. L. 386, brought a suit for the recovery of the penalty provided in said Act before Alderman John J. Irvin, of the City of Altoona, Pennsylvania, who, after hearing, entered judgment against the defendant for the penalty of $60.00 and costs, from which said judgment an appeal was allowed by this court without notice to the Commonwealth, plaintiff, and without hearing upon the question of the allowance of said appeal; that for the purposes of this case it is agreed that the question of the right of the court to allow an appeal in this case and whether said appeal was improvidently allowed shall be considered by the court with the same effect as though a motion had been made by the Commonwealth to strike off said appeal.

Ninth. All the formalities which may be conditions precedent to bringing the said suit under the provisions of said Act of June 1, 1907, have been complied with.

Tenth. If the court be of the opinion that under the facts as above stated the defendant is liable under said Act of June 1, 1907, for the penalty of $60.00 provided therein, then judgment to be entered for the Commonwealth in the sum of $60.00 and costs; and if the court be of the opinion that the defendant is not so liable, then judgment to be entered for the defendant; but if the court be of opinion that the defendant has no right of appeal and that the judgment of the magistrate is final or that said appeal was improvidently allowed, and for either reason the appeal should be stricken off then an order of the court be made accordingly; the costs to follow the judgment, and either party reserving the right to appeal from any judgment that may be entered thereon.

It will appear from the above that one of the main questions involved in the case is the technical question of the appeal; whether it was properly taken or not. If this question is decided in the Commonwealth's favor, the case will of course be ended without any real settlement of the most important question involved.

Storage Eggs for Fresh

How Can the Two be Told Apart? Continued Discussion Among Jobbers on the Secretary of Agriculture's Campaign. When the Practice is Fraudulent and When it is Not.

The announcement by the United States Secretary of Agriculture that he intended to stop the sale of storage eggs as fresh is still being warmly discussed by the wholesale egg trade.

While, as stated last week, opinions upon the legitimacy of the practice differ, all classes of egg jobbers agree that in many cases it is practically impossible to tell a storage egg from a fresh one, for which reason the results of the Secretary's campaign are problematical.

There is no chemical way of telling fresh and storage eggs apart. Occasionally they can be told by experts, who judge, however, from exterior conditions and not for any special change which the storing has produced.

For instance, eggs are mostly stored in April, when eggs are full and strong. If an egg were kept in storage thirty days, it would be practically impossible to tell by any known test that it had been in storage at all. Excepting, of course, by such simple tests as that the egg happened to be cold or sweaty.

The longer an egg remains in storage the easier it is to tell it from a fresh egg. Very often it can be recognized as a storage egg, because at the time it is removed from storage it is actually better than the fresh eggs which are being produced at that time. In August, for instance, storage eggs which have been put away in April are much superior to the fresh August egg, which is almost sure to be heated.

Certain jobbing handlers of eggs defend the practice on the ground that between the jobber and the retailer of eggs there is perfect understanding always as to whether an egg is storage or fresh, no matter whatever it may be called. The price is almost invariably a criterion which informs a dealer as to exactly what he is buying, and for that reason, even if a storage egg is called fresh, there is no fraud, because nobody is deceived. The jobbers who take this stand, however, agree that the practice has no defense when perpetrated by a retailer upon a consumer.

The Manufacturers' Change of Heart.

The readers of the "Grocery World" are generally familiar with a fact which is further demonstrated by a communication from the Great Western Cereal Co. which appears in another column, viz., that the concern named has been strenuously trying for several months to induce retail grocers to sell its leading brand of rolled oats at 12 cents per package. Not to help itself in any way, but to increase the retailer's profit.

The fact is notable because it introduces a revolution. In most cases the past attitude of the manufacturer was to care only for himself. To get his goods sold—that was the aim, whether the actual distributers profited or not. It is true, certain manufacturers have made efforts to safeguard the dealers' interest, but most of them have been perfunctory and some insincere.

The Great Western Cereal Co. deserves credit not for doing a philanthropic or charitable thing, but for business sagacity. As a matter of fact, there is neither charity nor philanthropy about it. The Great Western Cereal Co. acknowledges what has always been the fact, that the most successful business method is the unselfish method; that the manufacturer who sees that other factors in the distribution of his goods are decently compensated for their labors, is the manufacturer who will have the largest and particularly the most unshakable business.

Isn't This Toadyism?

It seems to the "Grocery World" that the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, which has accomplished some important reforms within jobbing circles, is inclined to toady large concerns in a wholly unwarranted way. Take the incident reported in another column, in which the Tobacco Trust, at the association's instance, stops the subsidizing of jobbers' salesmen. In the warm glow of gratitude over the favor thus done jobbers, the National Association has sent to all its members a letter stating that "inasmuch as the American Tobacco Co. has now concluded to eliminate this objectionable feature at the request of this association, it is your duty and should be your pleasure to further the best interests of said company, as well as your own, by promoting the sale of its products."

In Heaven's name, why? The subsidizing of jobbers' salesmen has never been a square deal. Bribing other men's salesmen to specially push goods which may or may not be profitable to the employer of those salesmen is swinish to the last degree. Naturally it is not illegal, as the average wholesale grocery salesman is paid by commission and is therefore to a great extent his own master.

The Tobacco Trust has now stopped, under pressure, a thing which it never had any business to do. What special consideration do the jobbers owe a concern that simply gives them, tardily, a square deal?

Why, as a matter of fact, the jobbers owe the Trust retribution for not doing the right thing sooner.

The Procter & Gamble Company.

In discussing the move of the Procter & Gamble Co. against the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, reported last week, the general attitude of the trade is that of utter wonder. That a concern so weighty and important should make a move so absolutely illogical, unbusiness-like and unfair, is regarded as inexplicable to the last degree. Even those who hate the Retail Grocers' Association, and who maliciously rejoice at what has happened to it, express great surprise that the Procter & Gamble Co. could bring itself to so endanger its own interests. For any concern endangers its own interests when it treats customers inequitably.

Consistency is at the very foundation of business success. No concern which was inconsistent in its dealings with its customers, which made fish of one and flesh of another, has ever permanently succeeded. That is exactly what the Procter & Gamble Co. is doing in Philadelphia. It has withdrawn an advantage from the Retail Grocers' Association, because it is composed of retailers, yet it still sells the chain stores. It is compelling the Retail Grocers' Association to pay $6.80 per box for Ivory soap, while it permits the chain stores to buy smaller lots at $6.50. Is this fair? Is it logical? Is it good business for the Procter & Gamble Co.? It seems to the "Grocery World" to be an attitude which a fifteen-year-old boy would know too much to adopt. The Procter & Gamble Co. is a gigantic and a very successful concern. It is not big enough, however, to safely do such things as this.

The New York Jobbers' Opposition to the Net Weight Plan.

In another column it is stated that Secretary Beckmann, of the New York Wholesale Grocers' Association, has issued a letter to all members inciting them to oppose the pending New York bill labeling package goods with net weight. The secretary has refused to permit the "Grocery World" to examine his letter, which may or may not justify suspicion of his belief in the strength of his arguments. From another source, however, it has been learned that Secretary Beckmann urges opposition to the bill on two grounds: —

(1) That it is not practicable to state accurately net weights in all lines of food in containers.

(2) That the trade has been educated to buy by the package, a five or a ten-cent package, perhaps, and it would be undesirable to switch to weights. People do not ask for the weight, now, and there is no use in stamping the weight on such packages.

These reasons don't seem to the "Grocery World" to amount to much. The first reason probably has no basis of fact whatever. Certainly with goods that do not shrink, and in which the weights are uniform, as they should be, there is not the slightest reason why the net weight should not appear upon the label. In the case of goods that do shrink, it was pointed out only a week ago that the net weight when packed can easily be placed upon the label.

The second reason is believed to be scarcely sincere. Suppose the trade does buy by the package, what about the public? It is true that the public also does buy many goods by the package, but it is almost always in the belief that the package represents a pound or an aliquot part of a pound. Why would it be "undesirable" to switch to weights? As a matter of fact, the change would involve no switch at all—no change in the packages, nothing in fact, save the printing of an extra line upon the label; a matter quite too trifling, if there be nothing behind it, to justify the heated opposition that has developed.

The "Grocery World" is very much afraid that some of the concerns who are against this net weight plan fear to lose something by it. And in the case of 7-ounce packages bought under the belief that they represent a half pound, the packer doubtless would lose something. But isn't it something he never had a right to have?

National Wholesale Grocers' Association Stops Tobacco Trust's Subsidizing of Salesmen.

Through the efforts of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association the American Tobacco Co. has at last agreed to stop its practice of subsidizing the salesmen of wholesale grocers into making a special push on Trust tobaccos. The success of the move is announced in the following letter, just sent out to the trade by secretary Berkman:—

After carefully considering the arguments presented in favor of withdrawing the subsidizing practice, as outlined by your committee, the American Tobacco Co. has concluded to discontinue said practice, effective May 1. This to apply to all of its customers. .

It is contended that premiums or subsidies to jobbers' salesmen by manufacturers is to a large extent responsible for demoralized conditions in the distribution of the product, upon which such subsidies are allowed. Inasmuch as the American Tobacco Co. has now concluded to eliminate this objectionable feature at the request of this association, it is your duty and should be your pleasure to further the best interests of said company, as well as your own, by promoting the sale of its products and in no instance permit your reprensentatives to accept subsidies from other manufacturers.

It is your further duty to notify your salesmen that the "premium offer" has been withdrawn at the request of the wholesale grocers, and that in consideration of said request having been granted by the above company, you will expect, as the employer, the same or better efforts exerted in the sale of said company's products, in order that you may realize a more liberal compensation than now exists, to cover the increased cost of distribution. You, the jobber, must now do your part in bringing about this condition.

The Man Who Can Only Sell on the Price

Of all the merchants on the face of the earth, it seems to me that the most forlorn is he who can only sell goods by underselling the market!

It gives a man a warm glow at the heart to reflect that he is selling his goods because they are good goods. That men respect the goods because of their goodness and respect him as the seller of them.

But to reflect that men have no respect for your goods and no particular respect for you as the seller of them—that indeed must be a humiliating realization.

And yet there are such merchants.

I have in mind a certain canned goods packer. Not very long ago he sold some tomatoes in the Philadelphia market. The quality was not satisfactory and the buyer rejected them. In the course of a consultation between the buyer, the seller, and the representatives of both, the packer made the following naive remark:

"I admit that last year I had to fill my cans with water from the pump, because tomatoes were hard to get. This year, however, I didn't use a drop."

The same packer not so long ago had occasion to store a lot of tomatoes in a Philadelphia warehouse. The market soon after began to rise, and before it was done prices reached $1.10 per dozen. These tomatoes were packed in regular-sized cans and with the relaxation in the strictness of examination which always comes when demand exceeds supply, they were bought and paid for at the full market rate.

Some of those tomatoes proved to be so bad that they had to be sold at 75 cents!

More recently the same packer took an order for 10,000 cases of tomatoes from one of the large chain-store concerns of Philadelphia. The order was obtained upon a sample case which it afterward developed was carefully packed for the purpose by the packer himself.

The broker who sold these goods, knowing the packer, went to the factory just as the 10,000 cases were about to be shipped and insisted upon seeing them.

They were no more like the sample than day is like night. The broker refused to permit them to be shipped and the deal fell through.

When these facts were related to me by a man who knew them of his own knowledge, I asked this question:—

"How can a packer like that, known to be a crook by everybody, or at least by most, continue to do business?"

"He couldn't, if he didn't cut below the market," was the answer. "He usually will sell goods 2½ cents below other people, and there's always somebody who considers the price more important than anything else."

That packer is a type of many merchants in other lines who never once in a year get the preference on the quality of their goods. Occasionally they get the preference on price with some one who can't see that price is always an index of quality, but they're not really entitled to it even then.

I should think such men would be intensely uncomfortable, when they realize their real position in the world of trade.

Always provided that they do realize it, which I sometimes doubt.

Just Compare Aromas

The strong, rich, mellow aroma that comes from a pound of Moco-Mo coffee when it is opened, as compared with the aroma that comes from others, is our best advertisement for the value of our double-packing plan.

The other coffees may have had as much aroma as Moco-Mo in the beginning; but they have lost it. No packing system can hold all the coffee strength intact like our system.

The Voice of Experience

Instead of talking about the American Slicing Machine ourselves this week, we are going to let one of our customers do the talking for us.

This letter is from the Fulton Market Company, operating a grocery and market at Elkhart, Ind. It is no different from thousands of others in our files, except that it goes a little more into detail.

Read it. It will interest you:

"We find after using your cutter nearly four years that in material, workmanship and construction it is faultless. We also find when we get a customer started on boiled ham, bacon or dried beef sliced on the machine, we have that customer's trade cinched on at least those items. Bacon, boiled ham, dried beef and boned smoked ham sliced on the machine, will go 25 per cent. further and give 100 per cent. better satisfaction. Hotels, restaurants and boarding house trade are not slow to see this and appreciate it. A regular customer on those items always uses other goods. Aside from that they are worth the price as an advertisement. We certainly are pleased with it."

You ought to investigate the machine, in view of these facts. Drop us a card.

It Costs You to Push Things

WE admit that you can make a higher profit on some of your own brands of coffee than you can on Ariosa.

But you can make a lot more on Ariosa than on any brand of your own which sells at the same price.

Two reasons for that: Ariosa has been advertised so widely it's a household word. You don't have to waste time and breath pushing it. You make a fair profit for doing little or no work.

Even if you made twice as much on another brand, it would net you no more, for you'd have to push it more, and every minute you spend in pushing costs you something.

Editor "Grocery World,"
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir:—I am inclosing a copy of Bill No. S 5,122; I think it would be a good idea to bring this bill before the readers of the "Grocery World," if you have not already done so.

Yours very truly,
HICKS RUN STORE,
S. O Johnson, Mgr.

The above correspondent inclosed copies of two bills, both of which have to do with delivering merchandise by mail, and both of which are now pending in Congress. With the bills the correspondent inclosed the following letter, which had been sent to him by one of the Senators of Pennsylvania:—

UNITED STATES SENATE, Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.
March 9, 1908.

Hicks Run Store Co.,
Hicks Run, Pa.

Dear Sirs:—I inclose herewith copies of bills which have been presented in the Senate at this session of Congress providing for a parcels post, and will thank you to give me an expression of your views on legislation of this character.

Yours truly,
BOIES PENROSE.

Both of the bills inclosed are short, so that the "Grocery World" reproduces their text for the consideration of its readers.

The following is Bill No. 5115:

A BILL

To increase the limit of weight of fourth-class mail matter, to amend the postage rates chargeable thereon, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That parcels of merchandise or other matter not embraced in the first, second, or third class of mail matter, and not exceeding eleven pounds in weight, shall, subject to the provisions of existing law governing matter of the fourth class, except as hereby amended, be admitted to the mails as such matter at the following rates of postage: One ounce, one cent; over one ounce and not exceeding three ounces, two cents; over three ounces and not exceeding four ounces, three cents; over four ounces and not exceeding five ounces, four cents; over five ounces and not exceeding six ounces, five cents; over six ounces and not exceeding eight ounces, six cents; over eight ounces and not exceeding twelve ounces, nine cents; and over twelve ounces and not exceeding sixteen ounces, twelve cents.

The above is a straight parcels post bill, and would be of immense aid to the mail-order houses.

Following is Bill No. S. 5122:

A BILL

To provide a rural delivery parcel post for merchandise and other articles mailed on rural delivery routes, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster-General is authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, to establish a domestic rural parcel post at special rates of postage, for the delivery on rural delivery routes, of foodstuffs (including groceries, provisions, meats, fruits, and vegetables), dry goods, drugs, books, and other merchandise, unless the same shall be unmailable under this Act or any other Act as hereby amended.

SEC. 2. That such special rates of postage on such parcels of merchandise shall be five cents for the first pound and two cents for each additional pound or fractional part thereof, and on parcels weighing less than one pound as follows: Two ounces or less, one cent; over two ounces and not exceeding four ounces, two cents; over four ounces and not exceeding eight ounces, three cents; over eight ounces and not exceeding twelve ounces, four cents; and over twelve ounces and not exceeding one pound, five cents: Provided, That such postage shall be prepaid by ordinary postage stamps affixed to such parcels, and that the character of such matter shall be indicated by the words "Rural Parcels Post," stamped on each of such parcels by the postmaster or rural carrier receiving it: Provided further, That the establishment of such rural parcel post and special postage rates shall not in any wise affect the mailing of or postage rate on packages of third and fourth class matter, except within the limitations stated: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be taken as authorizing the acceptance or delivery at the special rates of postage herein provided of any parcel offered by any person acting as agent or representative, upon commission or otherwise, for any person or company not resident on such rural delivery route: And provided further, That only such parcels shall be received for delivery at the special rates of postage herein provided as are offered by bona fide merchants or dealers whose regular places of business are on rural delivery routes covered by this Act, in the ordinary and regular course of their business, and by residents on such routes in their individual capacity.

SEC. 3. That parcels covered by said special postage rates and deliverable by said rural parcel post under this Act shall not exceed eleven pounds in weight, three feet six inches in length, or six feet in length and girth combined, and such parcels shall conform to the Postal Laws and Regulations concernig mailability, except as they are modified by this Act and regulations promulgated in pursuance thereof.

SEC. 4. That perishable articles of food submitted for mailing under said rural parcel post shall not be accepted by postmasters or rural delivery carriers more than three hours before the departure of the mail, and then only at the risk of the sender, and the postmaster or rural carrier shall stamp or note on any such parcels the time of acceptance and of transmittal, and the words "At the sender's risk."

SEC. 5. That the provisions of this Act shall apply only to parcels mailed on and addressed to rural delivery routes, as follows:—

(1) From the post-office or station from which one or more rural delivery routes emanate to any intermediate post-office or to any patron on any of said routes emanating from said post-office or station and supplied by rural carrier.

(2) From any intermediate post-office on any rural delivery route to the post-office or station from which said route emanates, or to any intermediate post-office, or to any patron on that or any other rural route emanating from said post-office or station and supplied by rural carrier.

(3) From any patron on any rural delivery route to the post-office or station from which said route emanates, or to any patron or intermediate post-office on that or any other rural delivery route emanating from said post-office or station and supplied by rural carrier: Provided, That in all cases where, under this Act, parcels are mailed at a post-office on a rural route which emanates from a station of such post-office, such parcels shall be offered for mailing at such station; and in all cases where parcels mailed under this Act are addressed to a post-office on a rural route terminating at a station of such post-office, such parcels shall be delivered to addressees at such station, and in the latter case addressees shall call or send for such parcels.

SEC. 6. That the proviso in the Act of April 28, 1904, Chapter 1,759 (Thirty-third Statutes, page 440), relative to the transportation of merchandise by rural carriers for patrons, is hereby repealed.

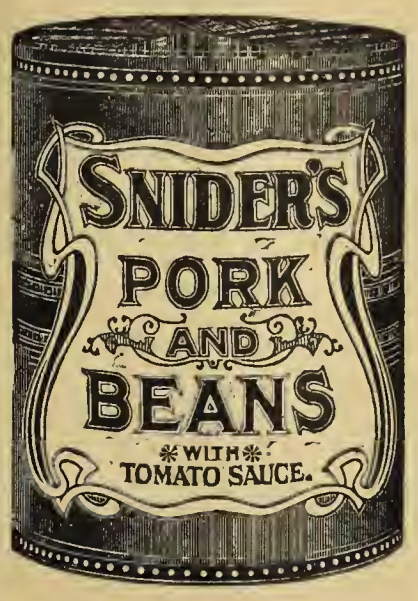
SEC. 7. That seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, scions, and plants, when mailed under this Act, shall be chargeable with the postage rates and subject to the limit of weight herein provided.

SEC. 8. That all provisions of law applicable to the third and fourth classes of mail matter, and all provisions of law applicable generally to mail matter, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, are hereby extended and made applicable to matter of like character mailable under this Act: Provided, That matter so mailable shall be subject to the rates of postage and the limitation of weight herein provided.

The above bill is the one which the New York Merchants' Association recommended in the last issue of the "Grocery World." It could obviously be used to the advantage of general storekeepers and grocers along rural delivery routes, and it would seem to be more of value to merchants of that class than to regular mail-order houses, which cannot ship goods at the rates provided unless their places of business are actually on a rural delivery route. This is not the case with any of them now.

Past Dried Fruit Season Highly Unprofitable

Practically no Jobber has Made any Money on any Staple Dried Fruits. Peaches, Prunes and Raisins all Ruling Much Below the Opening Price, at Which Jobbers Bought.



The dried fruit season now drawing to a close will long be remembered by wholesale grocers the country over as one of the most unprofitable, and in some cases the most disastrous, in recent years. Practically all staple dried fruits can now be purchased on a much lower basis than at the opening of the season last year.

Jobbers bought their future peaches last year on a basis from 2 to 5 cents per pound above present prices. In consequence of the exorbitant prices the consumption of peaches was very small during the entire season, and the jobbers were left with their high-priced stocks. Several weeks ago the weight of the market broke it, and prices took a decided slump. It will be impossible for jobbers who still have high-priced peaches on hand to get out whole.

Prunes are now selling on a basis from 2½ to 3 cents. The opening price at the beginning of the season was a 3½-cent basis, and later, when the price sharply advanced, some jobbers bought stock at 4½ to 5 cents per pound.

The worst case is that of raisins. Very high prices were made on raisins at the opening of the season, and for a while those prices were gotten. Later, however, the market slumped, and prices are now 2 to 3 cents lower on seeded goods than the price at which most jobbers bought. Loose raisins are about 2 cents lower.

If you say so, it's all right.

WE believe grocers have more influence with their customers than any manufacturer could possibly have through advertising, no matter how good it might be. We advertise Snider's Pork and Beans with Tomato Sauce extensively, in most of the big national mediums, to help the demand for this product, but we particularly want the grocer to know how good it is—because we are certain if he does, that no matter WHOSE Pork and Beans his customers ask for, he will tell them to take because he will want them to be grateful to him—

AND THEY WILL.

MOTHER'S OATS

We Want You to Want to Sell Them

We realized long ago that instead of making a grocer sell Mother's Oats, it was better to make him want to sell them.

That we do first by making them the most salable rolled oats on the market, and second by doing nothing to prevent him from getting out of them all the profit he feels entitled to.

We never put a retail price on Mother's Oats, either in advertising or any other way. They ought to retail around twelve cents, and they mostly do retail around there, largely because in all our advertising we never make any attempt to boom them for less.

Then the coupon deal helps lots, too.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is absolutely unchanged for the week. All grades are maintained on last week's basis, the lower grades being firmer than either the middle or the higher grades. No change is in sight unless the demand should increase much beyond its present volume. The consumptive demand for tea is moderate.

Coffee.

There is nothing new to report for the week's coffee market. Rio and Santos coffees are dull and stupid, sales being very small, so small in fact that options have declined slightly during the week. Spot Rio and Santos is unchanged and in light demand. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged, and so are Java and Mocha.

Sugar.

The sugar market is very firm, and an advance is expected in refined at any moment. Up to this writing no change has occurred for the week, but an advance may come before these words see print. Raws have not advanced further, but are firm as the week closes, though on one or two days they have manifested a temporary easiness. The general situation, however, by reason of actual scarcity of sugar, is strong. The demand for sugar is moderately active.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is dull an account of the warming weather, and rules at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup is taken eagerly as soon as produced, mostly, however, for export. Prices are strong, but unchanged. Molasses is unchanged in price and in light demand.

Fish.

The market for Norway 3 mackerel has shown some weakness during the week, owing to the fact that this size has not been selling very freely, and holders therefore want to move stock. Irish mackerel and other grades of Norways are scarce and high; demand fair. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and in light demand. Domestic sardines remain unchanged and dull. No considerable number of packers have named future prices as yet. Imported sardines are still scarce and firm. Salmon is in light demand at unchanged prices.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are undeniably soft. Sales of standard spot goods have been made during the week at 75 cents f. o. b., which is equivalent to a decline of about 2½ cents. Futures have also declined, and can be obtained now at 77½ cents, f. o. b., which is also a decline of about 2½ cents. Corn is dull. Future corn has sold well, but there is very little demand for spot corn. Spot peas are also dull and weak. Future peas are unchanged and in good demand. Apples are unchanged and in fair demand. Peaches are scarce and very dull. The small line of Maryland canned goods is unchanged, except as to spinach, which shows a decline of 5 to 10 cents per dozen. New spinach is now being packed and sold. California canned goods are unchanged and dull, not only in first hands, but in jobbers' hands. It is believed that generally speaking, the stocks of California canned goods in jobbers' hands are comparatively large.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are unchanged in price and in light demand. Peaches are very dull, at prices which show no further decline. Raisins are dull and weak. Currants are in fair demand at unchanged prices. Apricots are still high and dull. Apples are steady and in moderate demand. Citron, dates and figs are unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are firm, at a price both on spot and to come forward of $2.40. Foreign beans command $2.05. The demand is fair. Marrows have improved somewhat, and now command $2.15. Sales were made as low as $2. California limas are unchanged on spot, but are about ⅛ higher on the coast. Exact knowledge of the size of the stocks out there is responsible for the increased firmness. Dried and split peas of all grades are unchanged in price and in good demand.

Butter.

Since a week ago the market on both solids and prints has advanced 1 cent per pound. There has been a falling off in the make of fresh butter, as is usual for the season, and stocks of storage but-

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

ter are very light. Present conditions are likely to last for a few weeks yet, and so long as they last prices may continue to advance. Under grades of butter are getting scarce and have also advanced in sympathy with the better grades.

Eggs.

The receipts of eggs are still very liberal. The market is ruling on the same basis as a week ago, as the speculative demand is very good. The consumptive demand for eggs is very good also and the quality of the present receipts is fancy. Present conditions are likely to continue during the month of April.

Cheese.

The cheese market is unchanged. Stocks are gradually getting lower and the market is likely to continue firm and unchanged until new cheese begins to come in June. There is very little under-grade cheese in market and they are selling at 1 to 2 cents below the price of the best.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked meat line is very firm at ½ cent advance, which is due as well to the increased demand as to the advance in the price of hogs. Pure and compound lard are both firm at ¼ cent advance, due in the case of pure lard to the advance in hogs, and in the case of compound to sympathy with pure. Barrel pork is about 25 cents per barrel higher and canned meats and dried beef are unchanged.

Produce.

Pennsylvania potatoes, 85 to 90 cents per bushel; York State, 70 to 80 cents per bushel, demand fair; sweet potatoes, primes, $1 to $1.25; seconds, 50 to 60 cents, demand slow; Ohio globe onions, 50 cents per basket; York State, 50 cents per basket, demand fair; Bermudas, $1.50 to $1.75 per crate, demand slow; Spanish, 90 cents to $1.10 per crate, demand slow; yellow turnips, 30 to 35 cents per basket; white, 20 to 25 cents per basket, demand slow; carrots, 35 to 40 cents per basket, demand slow; beets, $4 to $5 per 100 bunches, demand fair to good; oyster plants, 3 to 3½ cents pe bunch, demand fair; watercress, $1.50 to $2.50 per 100 bunches, demand fair; Danish cabbage, $10 to $12 per ton, demand slow; domestic horseradish, $2.50 to $3 per barrel, demand good; spinach, 80 cents to $1 per barrel, demand good; scullions, 75 cents to $1 per 100, demand good; salad, $2 to $2.50 per barrel, demand fair.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.50 to $2 per bunch; 8-hands, $1.15 to $1.40 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 cents to $1 per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per bunch, demand poor; lemons, $2.25 to $3 per box, demand poor; California oranges, $2.50 to $3.25 per box, demand poor; pineapples, $3.50 to $5 per box, demand poor; apples, Baldwins, $2 to $3.50 per barrel; Hulbersons, $2 to $3.50 per barrel; Spy, $2 to $3.50 per barrel; Spitz, $2 to $3.50 per barrel; Kings, $4 to $5 per barrel; Russets, $2 to $2.50 per barrel, demand fair to good.

Nuts.

Peanuts, roasted, choice, $1.05 per bushel; fancy, $1.30 per bushel; jumbo, $1.55 per bushel; green, choice, 4¼ cents per pound; fancy, 5½ cents per pound; jumbo, 6½ cents per pound, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazil, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 9¾ cents per pound; walnuts, 12½ to 14 cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

We have had some steady buying of tomatoes this week. While there is no heavy business, yet such orders as are coming in are usually accompanied by instructions for quick shipment. The market is without any changes and there is practically no pressure to sell tomatoes; at least holders of good stock are not showing any disposition to cut prices. As a rule, we find where there is a cut in the price it is due to some irregularity in quality or condition.

There seems to be a little bit better inquiry for future tomatoes.

The oyster packing season is drawing to a close here. Prices are low and ought to be attractive. If past seasons furnish any basis for an opinion, it is fair to suppose that there will be a good many oysters wanted between now and next fall and it would not take very much buying to cause a reaction from present low prices.

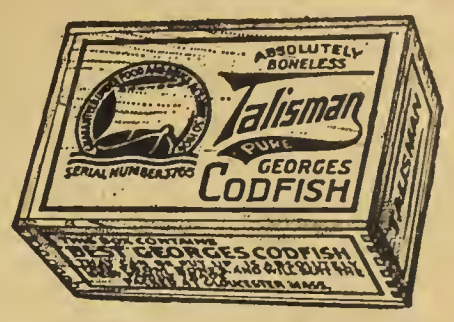
Spices.



The market has been exceedingly active during the week, especially for spot goods and the steady demand has had the effect of greatly reducing spot supplies, especially on peppers. The general tone of the market is good.

Pepper.—There has been no change in spot prices during the week. Futures however, are easier and slightly lower prices have been cabled from the other side on Lampong. This we understand is simply due to liquidation in Holland as well as the East, and we look for prices to soon react and move slowly upward.

Cayennes.—We look for a sharp advance. Spot supplies are very small and not sufficiently large for consuming needs. London is asking higher prices at this time.

Cloves.—Slightly lower during the week. All arrivals have been quickly bought up. As stated in previous letters it is hard to predict just what this spice will do.

Pimento (Allspice) fairly active with small stocks. Present low prices are no doubt safe. Good prime stock is scarce and the demand is quite satisfactory.

Seeds.—Caraway has moved upward fully ¼ cent higher. Poppy somewhat weaker. Celery, coriander and mustard unchanged.

MARKET NOTES.

Florida oranges are about unchanged in price, though some of the fancier grades command $4. From that figure the price declines to $2. The demand is fair.

Florida strawberries are very cheap. On account of large supply and lack of demand, the market has declined to 15 to 25 cents. The quality is fair.

Florida tomatoes range from $2 to $3 per crate, and are wanted. Hothouse tomatoes average 20 cents per pound.

New potatoes average $6 per barrel for No. 2s and $7 for No. 1s. The demand is good. All the new potatoes on the market are from Bermuda except a very few Charleston reds.

Florida beans range from $3.50 to $4.50 per crate, and the demand is good. The quality is fair and will improve from now on.

Florida squash averages $2 per bushel and the demand is light.

Rhubarb ranges from $6 to $8 per 100 and the demand is fair.

Hothouse radishes average $4 per 100 for red and $5 per 100 for whites. Southern radishes range from $1.25 to $1.75 per 100. The demand is good.

Salad is scarcer and higher. The average price is $2.75 per crate. Most of the present supply is from South Carolina.

Florida cucumbers are scarce. Hothouse cues range from $1.25 to $1.50 per dozen and are wanted.

Charleston asparagus ranges from 55 to 65 cents for prime stock. The price is 5 to 10 cents less for poorer stock. California asparagus is not wanted very eagerly.

The Erie, Pa., Association Will Censor Advertising Schemes.

The Advertising Committee has Prepared a List of Desirable and Undesirable Mediums. Druggists Start Co-operative Buying.

Erie, Pa., April 3, 1908.

The Advertising Committee of the Erie Business Men's Exchange has prepared a classified list of approved mediums for advertisers, including all newspapers in Erie County, and such other forms of advertising as are considered by the advertisers worthy of patronage. Each advertiser is to be furnished a list of approved mediums with request not to use those not approved. Each advertiser will give the secretary a list of contracts with mediums not approved and expiration dates for classification. If a majority of the advertisers are using a medium which has not been approved by the committee, the secretary will notify the advertisers thirty days before expiration of their contracts that the medium is not approved, with request that contracts be not renewed. Any information regarding contracts is confidential with the secretary. All solicitors for approved mediums will have cards of introduction from the committee, and all solicitors without credentials will be referred to the secretary for investigation. A card index will be maintained in the secretary's office covering all advertisers and advertising mediums.

Co-operative buying is practical in other trades beside grocery stores. On recommendation of State Secretary A. M. Howes, Erie druggists have started co-operative buying with very satisfactory results.

The little round cracker with "Exton" stamped on it. It has been on the market over half a century, and no consumer will use any other oyster cracker if she can get the Exton, because no oyster cracker can take its place in the esteem of those who know the difference between fair and good.

The Question of Canned Tomato Weights

Likelihood of a Bill being Presented to the Next Pennsylvania Legislature to Cure Lack of Uniformity in Weights. No Uniformity in Size of Cans and None in Weight of Contents.

No article which the "Grocery World" has published in recent years has aroused so much discussion as an article in a recent issue on the widely varying weights of several samples of tomatoes which had been bought, according to the buyer's own statement, as standards. Though the goods were sold as 3s, the weights varied all the way from 1 pound 8¾ ounces to 2 pounds 5¾ ounces, and the article made the point, with the list of widely varying weights as proof, of the great need of some standard of weight for canned goods, especially tomatoes.

Certain representatives of packers, in discussing the article in question, have contended that the goods in question were not sold as "3 pounds," but as No. 3s, and consequently should not be judged by any three-pound standard. The reply to that would seem to be that while the food law, forbidding the use of false statements of weight, has made it illegal to sell as "three pounds" tomatoes that weigh everything but three pounds, the origin of "No. 3s" was a size that was supposed to mean three pounds. But even if it is admitted that the standard is No. 3s, and not three pounds at all, certainly if No. 3 means anything it must mean uniformity along some line. Any standard is violated by goods that show such a wide range of weights as the tomatoes referred to, all of which were sold as 3s. For it is quite certain that if a can of tomatoes weighing 2 pounds 5¾ ounces is a standard No. 3, a can of the same brand weighing only 1 pound 8¾ ounces cannot be. The "Grocery World" contends that there is no room for such goods in market at all, even if sold "as is."

There is not much uniformity about the quality of canned tomatoes, but there is practically none as to weights, and never has been. Most Jersey packers use what is called a Jersey can, which is 5 inches high. Some, however, use a 5½-inch can and some a 5¾-inch can. Most Maryland packers use what is called a standard Maryland can, which measures 4⅞ inches high. A few use a 5 or even a 5½-inch.

A standard Jersey can, that is, one 5 inches high, will weigh, if properly filled, 2 pounds 10 to 11 ounces. A standard Maryland can, if well filled, should weigh 2 pounds 7 to 8 ounces.

There is, as pointed out, no uniformity as to sizes of cans used, and even if there were there would be none as to the weight of the filled can, for the reason that packers fill their cans more or less full, according to their ideas of honesty and square dealing. The writer has seen during the past week a No. 3 can of tomatoes weighing, can and all, 1½ pounds! The honest packers complain that if they fill their cans honestly full they are compelled to compete with others who, though using the same sized cans, fill them less full, and are therefore able to sell for less money.

From the latest bulletin of the Virginia Department of Agriculture, just received, are taken some figures which corroborate everything stated above. Several samples of canned tomatoes, all No. 3s, were bought and weighed. The results follow, being stated not in pounds and ounces, but in pounds and percentages of a pound:—

2.13 pounds, 2 pounds, 2.09, 2.02, 2.13, 2.37, 2.02, 2.10, 2.04, 2.09, 2.06, 2.13, 1.99, 1.98, 2, 2.38, 2.07, 1.91, 1.98, 2.02, 1.98, 2, 2.10, 1.96, 2.04, 2.03, 2.06, 2.35, 2.06, 2.07, 2.01, 2.02, 2.03, 2.05, 2, 2.02, 2.11, 2.02, 2.09, 2.05, 2.06, 2.09, 2.39, 2, 2.13. Thus the weights shown here range all the way from slightly less than 2 pounds (1.91 pounds) to nearly 2½ pounds (2.39 pounds).

It is not at all improbable that in order to cure this obviously improper condition a bill will be presented to the next Pennsylvania Legislature, requiring net weight to appear on all package goods.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Editor Science of Advertising.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed please find a few of our homely, home-made ads. Your paper is all right in general, "The Stroller" in particular.

Very respectfully,
$AM B. MCKEE CO.

The above correspondent sends in a batch of single column newspaper advertisements, each one six inches single column. I reproduce several of them.

I don't altogether like the way these advertisements are set. The one headed "Peanut Butter" is the best, in my judgment, speaking only of appearance, but even it is too black. The border is much too heavy for an advertisement of this size. It is a mistake to think that a border cannot be too heavy. A border is not intended to dominate an advertisement; it should simply be the frame for the picture. The advertisement should dominate always. The compositor who set these advertisements up saw that the black border would be too heavy for light type, so he has crowded together a lot of heavy faced lines. That makes the whole advertisement look over-heavy. To illustrate my ideas I have had the peanut butter advertisement reset:—

These are all good advertisements, however. They are short, terse and snappy and they waste no space. Not even in headlines or introduction—the advertisement starts right in to say its say without even a line of preliminaries. In a large advertisement it is not always well to do that, but in six inches I believe in making every inch count. The average small advertisement that comes to this department wastes a good deal of its space in introduction, talking sometimes of things that have little or no application to the advertisement itself. The McKee Co. is apparently such a stickler for whittling an advertisement down to real heart, I note that one useless line appears frequently through all of the advertisements they send me, sometimes several times in an advertisement. That is "We sell it this way." The whole advertisement is devoted to telling how you sell it—why use space to specifically say "We sell it this way"? In my judgment it is just as superfluous as it would be to say "Following is the price." When an advertiser is clearly describing his methods and quoting his prices, it is perfectly obvious that he is doing so, and therefore unnecessary to say that he is.

Seattle, Wash.

The Seattle (Wash.) Retail Grocers' Association is after local and State manufacturers of butter for giving short weight. In a recent investigation made by the association it was ascertained that of the butter now on the market, both bulk and brick goods, but one brand made in Washington is of honest weight.

Secretary Higgins, of the association, recently sent a letter to the butter manufacturers, which said, in part:—

> The question of honest weights in the matter of butter is of as great interest to the manufacturer as it is to the retailer, because the consumers are weighing their goods quite regularly, and refuse, in some instances, to buy certain brands of butter because they are short weight. The retailer, in self-defense, has to place the blame where it rightfully belongs, on the manufacturer.
> Personally, I do not believe it to be the intention of the manufacturer to purposely put up the butter in short weight packages, but when the butter of a certain brand shows from ½ to 1 ounce short to a pound without any bricks showing even the fraction of an ounce over-weight, it looks very much to the consumer and retailer as though it was the policy of the manufacturer of such brands to purposely put up short weights. We hope you will call the attention of your employes to the necessity of more care in the packing of your butter.

New York Jobbers.

The New York Wholesale Grocers' Association will take a hand in the effort to prevent the passage of the proposed amendment to the Weights and Measures Act requiring the printing of the net weight on the label. In a circular letter to the members, Secretary Beckmann calls attention to the proposed amendment and urges the members to communicate with their Assemblymen, and otherwise use their influence to prevent the proposed law passing the Legislature.

National Jobbers' Association.

The committee in charge of the coming convention of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, which will be held at Atlantic City June 3d, 4th and 5th, have sent the following letter to every jobber in business:—

> The annual meeting of this association will be held in Atlantic City, N. J., on June 3, 4 and 5, at the Marlborough-Blenheim.
> Every wholesale grocer is cordially invited to attend the meeting.
> The "objects" of this association have been outlined to you in a previous communication and presume you are interested in having them accomplished.
> Our special efforts have been directed to "pure food" legislation and the enactment of State laws to conform to the National law.
> To obtaining recognition from the manufacturer to the end that the wholesale grocer is the legitimate and most economical distributer to the retailer for the manufacturer.
> To receiving from manufacturers increased "cash discount" and proper remuneration commensurate with the cost of distribution.
> The elimination of "deals and schemes" of manufacturers, which are burdensome and unprofitable for the jobber to handle.
> The discontinuance of "subsidizing salesmen" of wholesale grocers by manufacturers, a practice which is not only demoralizinz, but wrong in principle.
> Presuming that you are interested in the above and recognize the value of organization among wholesale grocers, your presence at the meeting in June will be appreciated.
> Yours very truly,

The associated retailers of Placerville, Cal., have put themselves on record regarding wholesalers who sell consumers in the following agreement:—

> TO ALL CONCERNED.
> On and after May 1, 1908, the undersigned retail grocers of Placerville will not recognize as wholesalers any firm who sells its goods in any quantity to consumers in the territory in which we sell at retail the same commodity.
> The custom of so doing has become obselete with practically all firms who do a legitimate wholesale business.
> From above date we will encourage only such wholesale firms or their agencies with our patronage, who wholly refrain from competing with us in the retail trade.

GOOD NEWS FOR GROCERS.

Opportune Time to Take Advantage of a Big Bargain.

Usually "bargains" are offered by manufacturers who sell to dry goods and department stores. The grocer does not often have a chance to participate in a profitable purchase whereby he can get the same goods he always buys at a price that permits him to make an extra profit.

The pioneer cereal company—the Malta-Vita Pure Food Company—whose fame is known from ocean to ocean, has placed upon the market a superior corn flake, and to make a quick introduction, they offer a liberal free deal on a basis of 1 case free with 7; that is, get 1 case and pay for ⅞ of a case, or 2 cases and pay for 1¾, and thereby make an extra profit of 40 per cent. per case.

A dealer can also profit on the old "stand-by"—Malta-Vita—as the company offer a choice of all wheat, all corn, or assorted, as desired, so that a dealer is enabled to get this extra profit on all cereals sold to his regular wheat flake customers, as well as those asking for "corn flakes."

Their deal closes April 15th, and to the wise buyer belongs the chance to profit by ordering now.

Profit—not a chance—a certainty.

"When the Well Runs Dry."

You fellows whose wives help you in your business may think you appreciate 'em, but you don't.

It's a harder thing than you think to properly size up a good wife, particularly if she helps you in the business.

Until you lose her.

You can't lose some wives. You try but——well, never mind.

I know a grocer out in the Western part of Pennsylvania who's up against a lot of trouble.

It comes from appreciating his wife too much. And too late.

He had a dandy wife! I always said she was the real head of his business. They had no children, and they lived in nice rooms over the store. She had nothing much to hinder her, and so she was able to be in the store most of the time.

That wife was one of the best business partners a fellow could have. She kept all the books and did some of the buying. As a matter of fact she could have done it all as well if not better than her husband.

She helped wait on trade, too. She was all right, and I told her husband when she died about three years ago that he'd never in the world be able to replace her. He pretty soon found it out, too.

Yes, that woman was all right. But she worked a lot harder than she had a right to. What's more, her husband let her.

As I say, she died. It hit her husband fearfully hard. They had been practically one person in everything, and when she dropped out of the business it meant a whole lot more work for him.

Just how much he had no idea of until he had to do it.

A couple of years ago he married again. The second could give the first cards and spades on a lot of things. She was a better looking woman and a good deal younger, and she liked to fling her hoof.

Liked to go and have a good time. With the other one the store was all the good time she ever asked for or got.

The grocer knew his second wife was pretty skittish, but thought to himself, she'll settle down and help some a little later. The little later's never come. She's hotter after a good time today than she's ever been before, and as for helping in the store—not guilty!

She simply won't do it. Her argument is that she can't do it—has no knack that way—and I believe she's right.

What would you do if you were up against a contrast like that? The first wife faithful, hard-working, interested in the business, able to run it and indispensable in it, and the second no good at all? At least no good in that way.

I guess you'd do just as he does. You'd tell her. And you'd keep on telling her. And you'd tell her again.

And you'd have scraps and things would go all to hen.

That's exactly what things have done there. That grocer is trying to change a leopard's spots. He's trying to compel his wife to take an interest and do some work in something that she has no interest in and don't know how to work for.

Will he succeed? He will not.

But maybe the poor devil don't appreciate his dead wife now! Didn't he appreciate her while she lived? Not half. But if the poor dead soul has a jealous disposition, she's getting her revenge now, all right, for her memory and her reminiscences are making the life of her successor a regular bear-garden.

The other day I stood looking at the cashier in another grocery store not very far away from the other one. She was a woman of about thirty-five and a hard worker, as I know from periodical visits to the store.

The night I was there she looked tired. It was a sweaty night and there was perspiration all over her forehead.

I didn't say, did I, that she was the wife of the proprietor?

"Your husband certainly ought to appreciate you," I said as I looked down at her sweaty little face.

She laughed a little.

"I hope he does," she said, "but I don't feel sure. I think he takes it as a matter of course.

"We've been married five years," she went on, "and in the beginning I had nothing much to do in the daytime—we board—so I thought I'd like to be in the store. John liked the idea, so I came. Sometimes I think I work harder than anyone else in it. I don't mind it, though."

The grocer just then came back—I've known him for years—and I said:—

"See here, old man, you're working this little woman to death."

He thought it was a joke.

"Pretty healthy looking corpse, ain't you, Jen?" he said with a laugh, and that was all the good it did.

Some of these days Jen may die. These overworked women have a way of doing that.

Will John realize then that she was overworked?

He sure will!

THE MODEL CASH GROCERY STORE.

GENTLEMEN:—In reply to your inquiry of recent date, we enclose a few sample slices of sandwich dried beef, sliced in the highest style of the art, sliced on Johnson's patented "EVERSHARP." These slices, thin as paper, smooth as glass, soft, moist and delicious, were cut the full size of a six-pound knuckle. The whole knuckle was sliced to perfection in six minutes.

I also enclose, in separate wrapper, some very small, very thin slices cut from the meat that covers the knuckle bone. Please notice that the little nub end of gristle and skin remaining unsliced weighs less than a quarter ounce, every particle of edible meat sliced up in thin, bright, salable slices. Of course we never sell any one a quarter pound of these little slices; but every half or quarter pound we weigh up gets alike its equal share of little and broad slices.

Please note the saving in time—as much work done in six minutes as the best circular-knife machines can do in twenty minutes, and then the quality of our work—slices thinner, smoother and more perfect than any other machine can possibly produce. So moist, so soft, so juicy, so broad, so transparently thin they cause enthusiastic comment wherever introduced, resulting in a large increase of very profitable trade.

We sell our machines for forty-six dollars on small monthly instalments, and every machine can be depended on to more than earn its own cost. If you prefer to pay cash we allow you a liberal discount. Hoping to receive your order.

Respectfully yours,

A. W. JOHNSON.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Full Weight Window.

Herewith is an illustration of a "full-weight" window display for sugar.

Place a pair of scales in the centre of the window and have a carton of sugar on one scale and the weight on the other, exactly balancing it. Arrange cartons of the sugar in the rear and along the sides of the window. In the open space have several cartons of the sugar open so as they can be seen, and in the front of the window spread several piles of granulated sugar, as shown in the drawing. The cartons may contain lump or granulated sugar. but it is more attractive if the goods are mixed. That is, have some lump sugar exposed and also some granulated. The covering of the floor should preferably be of a dark color, for instance, dark green, so as to show off the exposed sugar. Of course the sugar must have no dust or specks among it, as cleanliness is one of the chief factors of the display.

Above the packages of sugar and the scales have a sign calling attention to the full weight, and add any other desirable matter which is suitable for such an advertisement.

The scales or balances used should be polished up a little so as to add to the effect.

There is no expense connected with the display and when the idea is carried out with little more detail the window will be very attractive.

A Dessert Window.

The illustration shows a very attractive window dressing arrangement suitable for the display of different kinds of desserts and jellies. Have the window spotlessly clean, of course, for nothing adds more to the attractiveness of a display than cleanliness. Cover the bottom of the window with suitable paper and arrange the packages of the goods to be displayed in the manner shown in the drawing.

Then have in the forepart of the window a variety of cooked dishes, such as jellies and puddings. The desserts are not hard to make and the little time that is expended in making up the dishes is well invested. The jellies can be in a variety of flavors and cut fruit can be placed inside the jelly. The dishes, which should be of different designs, should be placed on neat, fancy paper napkins.

Have a sign with a suitable advertisement thereon hung in the centre of the window. The two tapes holding the card from the top of the window can be fastened to the front top corners of the window, while the lower tape may be fastened to the lower rear corners of the window. This display is very neat and appetizing and is sure to draw trade. If desired, small neat cards with the prices of the goods written on them can be placed in suitable places in the window.

Pennsylvania News Items.

From every county in Pennsylvania outside of Philadelphia and Allegheny, the Dairy and Food Division of the State Department of Agriculture has collected samples of canned goods offered fo sale, and Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust has ordered thorough analyses of each. Chemists Evans of Erie, Frear of State College, Cochran of West Chester, and Ashman and Steiffel of Pittsburg, are making the analyses, and they have been directed to report not only as to adulterations, but as to misrepresentations in the labels.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I write to ask if you can find out or tell me the lowest possible price which Sperry & Hutchinson green trading stamps can be purchased. I know there is an inside price and would like to find out the same.

Trusting you will be abe to furnish me with the information I ask, I am,

Yours truly,
L. M. Worthington.

To the best of the "Grocery World's" knowledge and belief, there has never been, except in the very early days of the trading stamp scheme, any fixed price for the stamps. The sellers got all they could and the price has generally ranged from $5 per 1,000 down to $2.

To Help Retailers' Rolled Oats' Profits.

Chicago, March 27, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—From various comments that have been made by the trade press throughout the country, you are probably familiar with the successful efforts we have been making during the past season to force our principal standard size brand Mother's Oats to a more profitable price to the retailer. In our ads. which have appeared in the trade press we have gone so far as to state that 12 cents is the minimum price at which our package should be sold, this price having appeared on thousands of store cards which we have distributed throughout the country during the past season.

We have followed up this campaign by recently sending out over 200,000 circulars to the retail trade, insisting on their getting the price mentioned. It develops that in most markets, through the work which we have done unaided and unsolicited, the grocers are now obtaining a profitable price on all standard size brands which they are distributing, having made 12 cents the minimum.

We have received splendid support from many of the retail associations and resolutions which are being passed by them with a view of assisting us in the good work are increasing; hence inasmuch as all of the officials of the associations from whom we have heard on this subject heartily approve of our policy, we believe with the timely support of the trade press this movement may be made a national issue at the annual retail convention to be held in Boston in May.

Since the movement so far as rolled oats are concerned does not apply to our brand alone, but should receive the support of all manufacturers who cater to the retailer, and who desire to see him get a fair profit, we feel that the matter is one that we hope will receive the support of your paper, and trust that having satisfied yourself of the correctness of the foregoing statements we may look for some strong editorial comment in your columns on this most important subject, affecting the retail grocers' interests so vitally.

Every grocer in the United States, large and small, handles some brand of standard size rolled oats; hence each can appreciate what this movement means to him, and if it is possible to set in motion a movement that can be brought to a successful issue, so far as rolled oats are concerned, it should result in the grocer, as an individual and as an association, taking up other commodities on which the present margin of profit shows him less than a living profit and place same on a basis of paying him at least a living profit. It is viewing the proposition from this, a broader standpoint, that we respectfully invite your attention to the possibilities of the subject in question.

Yours truly,
The Great Western Cereal Company,
N. H. Armour, Mgr. Eastern Sales Department.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Beginning with April 20th, the members of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange will endeavor to sell fruit and produce under different arrangements as to hours. Instead of opening at midnight as now, which compels retail grocers to lose half their night's sleep in order to get satisfactory stock for the next day's sales, the wholesale places will be kept open from 5 A. M. until 5 P. M. If the plan works it will be a boon to everybody concerned.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice From the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

EXPECTED RESULTS.

Nothing beats confidence in ourselves. The first of the season's enthusiastic efforts were made last week on shad. It was a success. Congratulations. We went in to win. We had the goods. We had the price. These created confidence. First in the conditions. Second in yourselves. Everybody was in your favor. That's how we want you to feel at all times. Stick to the belief that "you can." Never mind the sneers. Never mind the cold water. When the foundation is right—build. Build quickly and strongly and perfectly, looking to the completed structure as you have it built in your own mind.

JERSEY TOMATOES.

Monday we'll take in a couple hundred cases of Jersey tomatoes from the Pennington Canning Co. For one week we'll put them out at three cans for 25 cents. Now, here's something worth talking about. These goods are worth 90 cents at the factory by the carload. It will be the bargain tomato sale of the year. It will make talk. It will make new buyers. Last fall packed, solid selected full 3s. Not one of you ever sold such goods at such a price. Say so to your customers. You ought to write from three cans to a case on every order you take. Put emphasis on Pennington. Point to the name on the can. Tell about poor watery Marylands being sold at 10 cents straight, and say, with truth, that whatever of these are left will go to 12 cents next week. That's the way to make your bargain sale felt.

MEAT—ABOUT HIGH PRICES.

We had to advance our fresh meat prices, of course. Legs of lamb from 16 to 20 cents a pound is a big jump. Best steak from 22 to 25 cents, and roasts from 16 to 19 cents is staggering to the average Saturday buyer. Now's your chance to talk canned tongue, fresh fish, smoked meats, and by the way, canned roast beef, 2s, at 25 cents. The last has been a dead letter since Sinclair opened fire on the packers. Nevertheless, talk it and display it, and prove it to be an economical purchase. People of the poorer class simply must resort to something of this kind. Dig in while the time is ripe and let us clean up this stock.

COMMISSIONS FOR THE WEEK.

Johnston's preserves, in stone pots, 60 cents. Three cents a pot commission. We have twenty-three crates of these goods, and they're usually a good seller at this season. Nearly all the kinds.

American macaroni. "Our" brand, 10 cents straight. One cent commission. Made in the cleanest macaroni factory in the country. Macaroni and cheese is a favorite dish, easily made. Mention this.

Karo syrup, half gallon size, 25 cents. Five cents commission. Another month and you won't hear of Karo until next fall. Do your best with it. The commission is a liberal one, and we make it so as to move a few cases between now and Saturday night.

Usual commission on teas and coffees.

Three cents a pound on peanut butter at 25 cents a pound.

Five cents a keg on Holland herring, Milkers, at $1.

GRENOBLE WALNUTS.

Funny time to talk these, but the less we have to put in storage the better. There's about a bale left which is unusual for us. Make a good show of them. Crack open a few and scatter the cracked ones over the display. Make the price 16 cents a pound. You'll be surprised how many you'll get rid of by judicious

AN OBJECT LESSON.

Last week the writer opened an account with a most prominent and most desirable customer, who quit dealing at a certain store because the salesman gave her an argument. She returned a ham stating that it was unsound. The salesman couldn't see it and tried to make her look through his eyes and smell through his nose. Avoid this. Don't argue. Don't for any sake try to make a woman believe a thing is all right that she takes the trouble to return as all wrong.

Preserve Eggs a Year with Lard.

New French Scientist Develops a Plan by which He Can Keep One Hundred Eggs a Year with Four Cents' Worth of Lard. Process Said to be Even Better Than the Liquid Glass Plan.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 3, 1908.

Consul D. I. Murphy, of Bordeaux, forwards to this country a synopsis from a French journal on a new method of preserving eggs, which, he says, appears to have the double merit of cheapness and simplicity. The article was based upon the experiments of Doctor Campanini, as reported by him in the December bulletin issued by the Italian Minister of Agriculture.

Doctor Campanini, after reviewing the various known means of preserving eggs—by salt water, lime water, silicate of potash, vaseline and cold storage—described his experiments, which showed better results than all others.

His theory is that to preserve eggs some system must be adopted that will absolutely prevent the exchange between the air outside and that inside the egg—for it is this continual exchange that causes putrefaction.

Doctor Campanini selected perfectly fresh eggs and covered them with lard, so as to effectually stop up all the pores. The shells were thus rendered impermeable, the exchange of air was prevented and, the obstruction of the pores not permitting the evaporation of the water, there was no loss of weight. The whites and yellows of the eggs retained their color perfectly and the taste was not modified in the slightest degree. When properly coated with lard—not too thickly—the eggs are put in baskets or boxes upon a bed of tow or fine odorless shavings and so arranged that there will be no point of contact between them—otherwise a mold will develop and putrefaction result. The packing room should be perfectly dry, the question of temperature not being important. By his process Doctor Campanini kept a quantity of eggs for a whole year—through a very hot summer and a very cold winter—and they were perfectly preserved. He says that 4 cents' worth of lard suffices to coat 100 eggs, and that anyone could easily prepare that number of eggs in one hour's time.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

EVERY ONE A GOOD CHANCE.

No. 286.—Near Chester, Pa. Store 27 x 125 feet. Does $37,000 yearly, three-quarters cash. Stock $2,500 to $3,000. Uses three teams. Good house adjoining, within twenty feet of store and stable. Nets clear 8 per cent. above everything. Bad health cause of selling. Price inventory.

No. 313.—In heart of Philadelphia's most aristocratic residential district. Store 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, half cash, balance monthly. The people who buy at this store are the promptest payers in the city. Stock $2,000-$3,000, net profits 20 per cent., owing to the fact that customers are mostly wealthy. Owner going to the country and will sell at inventory. This store is a little old-fashioned in some respects, but is thoroughly prosperous and can be very greatly increased.

No. 314.—In Ocean County, N. J. Summer resort, but good winter population also. General store, 40 x 75 feet. Doing $30,000 yearly, half cash, balance strict 30 days. Present stock $5,000, but can be reduced to $2,500 without impairing business. Uses two teams. Net clear 10 per cent. Balance of building divided into flat and offices, profitably rented. Owner retiring from business and will sell at inventory.

No. 324.—In North Philadelphia, store 16x42 feet. Does $300 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock $750. Uses one team. Clear net profits 12 per cent. Good house connected, for sale or rent. Owner retiring from business. Price inventory.

No. 326.—In West Philadelphia, store 17x32 feet. Does $350 to $450 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Stock $400 to $500. One team. Good house connected. Net profits 15 per cent. Owner retiring from grocery business, and will sell at inventory. This store has been established 20 years, and is solidly prosperous.

No. 329.—In Germantown, Philadelphia. Does $300 weekly, all cash. Stock about $1,000. No team. Nets clear 10 per cent. This business sells only groceries. The meat department is rented to another dealer on profitable terms, which make advertiser's rent very low. Owner has other business which takes his time. Price inventory.

No. 333.—General store in Mifflin County, Pa. An extremely strong proposition. Size 30x100 feet. Business about $4,000 per month, 40 per cent. cash. Stock $6,000, which can be reduced considerably. Uses two teams. Business thoroughly profitable, netting about $5,000 per year. Owner in poor health and wants to retire to country place. Will make very favorable terms. Low price for fixtures. Stock at inventory, with proper allowance for everything not strictly up to the mark. The business can be very decidedly increased.

No. 334—In West Philadelphia, size 16x44. Does $375 weekly, three-fourths cash. Stock $1500 but can be reduced to $1000. Clear slightly more than 10 per cent. above everything. Dwelling connected for sale or rent. Owner going into manufacturing and will sell at inventory. Fullest investigation.

No. 336.—On best business street of West Philadelphia. Store 16x27 feet. Does $150 to $200 weekly, all cash. Stock about $700. No team delivery. Clears 20 per cent. as expenses are low. Good dwelling connected for sale or rent. Good reasons which will be fully explained. Price inventory.

No. 340.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size 24x60 feet. Does $45,000 yearly. Three fourths cash. Stock carried, $2,500. Uses two teams. Actual net profit, 12 per cent. Reason for selling, ill-health. Established 21 years. Price inventory. Fixtures will run about $1,500. Amount required, around $3,800. No dwelling.

No. 341.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and delicatessen. Size 20x30 feet. Does $300 weekly. All cash. Stock $2,000, but can be reduced to $1,300. Push cart delivery. Net profits, 15 per cent., as family run store. Established 12 years. Owner must sell as death compels him to assume another business. Price inventory. Fixtures will run about $1,500, but can be reduced to $1,100. Amount required, around $3,000. Cash or good security. Dwelling.

No. 345.—In West Philadelphia. Meats and provisions. Size 15x28 feet. Does about $11,000, three-fourths cash. Mostly sells meats, so stock only averages $250. No team. Actual net profits, 20 per cent. Owner wishes to change business, for reasons which will be explained. Price inventory. Take around $800. Dwelling.

No. 346.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats, provisions. Size, 16 x 30. Does $200 to $250 weekly, three-quarters cash, balance weekly. Stock about $500. Push cart delivery. Net profits 12 per cent. Low rent and expenses. Satisfactory reasons for selling. Price inventory. For stock and fixtures about $1,200 required. This is an extremely strong small proposition.

No. 347.—In high class part of West Philadelphia. Meats, provisions, canned goods, etc. Size, 22x60. Does $500 weekly, all cash. Stock $300 to $350. One team. Clear net profits 15 per cent. Rent, $30 monthly. Pay roll, $21 weekly. No real estate. Owner wants to get in other business and will sell at inventory. Cost about about $1,000, without team.

No. 348.—In booming New Jersey resort Cash Grocery, doing a yearly business of $20,000, can be greatly increased. Well established. Will sell at inventory. Stock about $1200. Will stand fullest investigation. Owner has another store in another town and cannot attend to both.

No. 351.—In southern Philadelphia. Tea, coffee and groceries. Size, 17x40 feet. Does $16,000 yearly, all cash. Splendid transient trade—3,000 people pass the store every two days. Stock only about $100. Net profits, 12½ per cent. Owner has trouble with help and wants to retire. Fine place for man and wife. Price asked, complete, about $700, including fine National cash register.

No. 353.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and provisions. Size, 16 x 30 feet. Does $14,000 yearly, two-thirds cash. Dwelling connected. Stock, $1,000 to $1,500. No team. Net profits, 10 per cent. Owner wants to go further into suburbs and will sell at inventory or lump sum of $1,500. Splendid chance for adding meats.

No. 356.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 36 feet. Does $400 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Dwelling connected, if wanted. Stock about $800. Uses one team. Nets clear 10 per cent. Owner needs a rest and his eyesight is failing. Will sell at inventory. Will take about $1,000.

In all of these the cause of selling is good, and the fullest investigation courted. Every one paying.

A Fixture You Need

Our Five-jar Fixture, one of the useful and ornamental fixtures you can have. Made in both oak and cherry, 3-coat finish. No old style hinges; but the lids lift and spring to right, thus completely exposing the contents.

Occupies no more room than a 4-jar fixture, is a silent salesman, and helps to make a grocer proud of his store. All trimmings nickeled.

The Welles & Davis Mfg. Co.
WYALUSING, PA.

WHY AND BECAUSE

Why has the Exton Cracker kept growing in popularity from 1847 to 1908? Because you can induce people to buy some other oyster cracker only once, and because you can induce them to stop using the Exton only once. Why does the Exton cracker lead and the others follow? Because there is no other oyster cracker for the Exton to follow, so it must lead.

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

Packed in ½-lb. jars, 6 and 12-lb. boxes

Do You Want to Make $300 More Every Year?

It is a mighty nice thing to be able to increase your profits by such a tidy sum as $300 a year on an investment of less than $20, but that is what you can do if you will put in an Acme Peanut Roaster (equipped for kerosene, gas or gasoline), the simplest and cheapest automatic roaster made. Anybody can operate it. There is nothing to get out of order and little or no expense in running it.

Give your customers a chance to buy freshly roasted peanuts and you will make from $1 to $3 a day. We would like to tell you more about it.

ATSATT BROS.

If you could see some brands of rennet made, you'd never offer them to your customers in a thousand years!

Filthy, unclean and nasty! We wouldn't sell such rennet if we had to work in the streets!

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet is guaranteed to be perfectly and absolutely clean. It's the best in other ways, too—strongest, purest and most profitable.

It makes you 100 per cent.

THEY WILL WALK BLOCKS OUT OF THEIR WAY TO GET THEM

When a woman gets hold of a broom that lasts two or three times as long as the ones she has been buying, she will walk blocks out of her way to get that kind of a broom again.

We are making this kind of brooms only. Try a dozen, tell your trade that they are the finest ever put on the market and CHIPMAN BROOMS will keep people coming to your store regularly, if nothing else will. $2.25 per doz. is our price for a broom that retails for 25c., and any one of your customers will pay 30c. for them and be satisfied.

Chipman & Wills Broom Co., 5 Granite St., Philadelphia, Pa.

NO POISON HERE

This pictures the famous Steel Jar Cap, the one that doesn't get a poisonous corrosion on it when it seals a jar of fruit. Wouldn't your customers like to know this? Won't they buy it when they learn that it doesn't cost any more than the old-fashioned zinc kind? Sure they will.

They Look Alike But Aren't

At first glance all starches look alike, both Laundry and Corn Starches. There is really a heap of difference, though it takes use to bring it out. In other words, if you sell a poor Starch your customer will find it out before you will.

Take our word for it, no Starch has ever been quite so fine and good as Murdoch's Laundry and Corn Starch. With manufacturing improvements of our own, and a genius for the most painstaking care, we are producing goods we are proud of.

Does it commend itself to you that we are independent of any Trust?

Do You Know What Ramly Stands For?

We'll tell you—the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. It is the one that is so widely imitated by our competitors.

If you want particular smokers to come to you, put the Ramly in stock.

On Your Shelves For Years

¶Old goods are like old friends—you have a warmer feeling for them than you have for strangers.

¶Take Babbitt's Best Soap. For years it's been the standard laundry soap of the country.

For years, probably, it has stared back at you from your shelves until you and your customers both have come to consider it as much of a fixture as your scales.

¶Don't be tempted to displace it by any get-rich-quick soap. Stick to tried and true friends. Babbitt's Best Soap has always paid you a good profit; hasn't it earned your good will?

Do you know how cheap Electricity is? Ever think of using it to Grind Coffee? Ask the Manager of the nearest Power House. He will post you on the convenience and economy of Electricity in your business. An will save your clerks' time, your customers' time, and advertise your store. Write for catalogue describing our various Electric Mills, with capacities for granulating from four ounces to nine pounds of coffee per minute.

The illustration shows our double mill No. 08712, with motor for direct current; one mill fitted with grinders for granulating, and the other for pulverizing. Each iron hopper holds six pounds of coffee. There are two speeds, fast and slow, which can be instantly changed from one to the other; at fast speed this mill granulates three pounds of coffee per minute. Fitted with ¾ H. P. motor for direct current, or with ½ H. P. motor for alternating current. The latter for slow speed only. Can be regulated while running for grinding either fine or coarse.

We will gladly give any information desired about these mills.

SOLVING HAM PROBLEMS

All of the problems of your ham department are solved by selling PREMIUM HAMS — the same yesterday, to-day and forever. We can and do control our raw material, and so PREMIUM HAMS steadily maintain the same perfect quality.

And the advertising we do for them brings a steady stream of trade to the grocers' door.

They're Tired of the Imitations

Don't you think your trade are about tired of the rainbow-hued imitation gelatine that desire for novelty has given some vogue during the last few years?

Don't you think they'd like some real gelatine—the pure, fresh, old-fashioned gelatine made of fine calves' stock, clear spring water and nothing else.

You'd probably be surprised at the eager welcome Chalmers' Gelatine would get from your customers. Try it. Granulated or shredded.

JAMES CHALMERS' SONS, Williamsville, N. Y.

You Can't Match It Anywhere

If you want to give your customers the very finest corn ever packed it must be "Onarga Country Gentleman." Don't the following reasons convince you that this is true?

1. We grow our own seed at a cost of 13c per lb.
2. We grow every kernel of corn that goes into our cans.
3. Our farms are in the Natural Corn Belt—It doesn't grow as fine anywhere else.
4. We cook our corn by the New Automatic Process during which the cans turn continuously bringing the corn to the heat instead of the heat to the corn. This means that every grain is cooked the same—which isn't the case with the ordinary process because the corn nearest the tin is cooked too much when that in the centre is done.
5. The contents of every can is exactly the same, white, perfect, delightfully flavored. Open a sample, compare it with your best corn and you will see what this means.

How to Answer Their Questions

Put a box of I-V Washing Tablets on your counter. They will be such a novelty that every woman who comes in will ask what they are and what they will do. Tell them this:—

1—They contain no acid of any sort.
2—They wash clothes without rubbing.
3—They make clothes beautifully white;
4—They can be used in hard water;
5—They take stains from table linen without any rubbing whatever.

Any one of these points would sell a package—just see the women's eyes glisten when you name them all.

Losing Your Weights?

Get a Troemner No. 24 Ball Scale

Greatest Improvement in Rapid Weighing

Does away with weights absolutely. The balls are placed in the holes, thus weighing from one to fifteen pounds, with the sixteen ounces in fractions on the side beam, giving a total weighing capacity of sixteen pounds.

Two Reasons for Horses

You prefer horses to automobiles for delivery for either one of two reasons:—

Either you love horses, or believe they're cheaper.

If you love horses, we have nothing to say except that it's an expensive love, when automobiles do so much more work for the money.

If you believe horses are cheaper delivery than the Lindsley Car, you're wrong, begging your pardon. The Lindsley Car will run 30 miles on one gallon of gasoline, and it will carry 1500 pounds during every foot of the way.

Can horses do that? Write about it.

A Wonderful Increase

In this time of uncertain business conditions, when many manufacturers are having difficulty in marketing their goods, we point with pride to the magnificent record of sales of

DAYTON MONEYWEIGHT SCALES

The subject of "Saving Profits" comes closer to the heart and pocketbook of the retail merchant when trade is dull, than when prosperity is at its highest. Merchandise is sold at a closer margin and in smaller quantities, but the average of loss in the use of old style scales does not decrease in proportion. Merchants are studying this subject as they never did before and this accounts for the fact that January, 1908, shows over January, 1907. Merchants are not buying our scales for fun; they are installing them to save money. A MONEYWEIGHT SCALE is a guarantee of protection to both merchant and customer. No other scale has reached the high degree of accuracy and sensitiveness.

40 PER CENT. GAIN

Don't overlook the fact that we have an attractive exchange proposition whereby a user of a computing scale of any make can bring his equipment up to-date.

Our agent is frequently near your place of business, and if you will drop us a card, we will have him call and show this scale on your counter.

Baking Powder Conflict Shaping Up

Royal Baking Powder Trust Organizes a Glucose Company and will Make Glucose. Corn Products Company will Retaliate by Making Baking Powder. Sharp War Expected. Fight Like that of Arbuckle Bros. vs. Sugar Trust.

Gradually the baking powder conflict which now seems certain to take place between the Corn Products Co. and the Royal Baking Powder Co. is drawing to an issue. During the past week the Royal Baking Powder interests have elected the following official staff and board of directors for the American Maize Products Co.: F. J. Boselly, of New York, president, and D. B. Scully, of Chicago, vice-president and general manager; directors, F. J. Boselly, D. B. Scully, W. S. Champs, W. E. O'Neill, P. L. Saenger, W. J. Underwood and C. Burkhert. Mr. Boselly is the present head of the Royal Baking Powder Co. Mr. Scully organized the Western Glucose Co. and was its president.

The American Maize Products Co., which is the successor of the Western Glucose Co., has been incorporated under the laws of Maine with an authorized capital stock of $3,000,000, of which $1,500,000 is 7 per cent. cumulative preferred and the balance common. The Western Glucose Co's capital stock was $2,400,000. The $600,000 of new stock was purchased by the Royal Baking Powder Co. and the money paid into the treasury of the Maize Co. and will be used as working capital.

The head offices of the American Maize Products Co. will be located in New York. The purchasing department will be maintained in Chicago.

In this connection, it is expected that the Corn Products management will be in a position to manufacture baking powders in the early future, when the increased competition, it is believed, will lead up to a sharp cut in prices. President Bedford, of the Corn Products Co., has selected several well known men in trade circles to look after this branch of the business.

Thus the Royal Baking Powder Co., makers of baking powder, will engage in the making of glucose and the Corn Products Refining Co., makers of glucose, will engage in the making of baking powder. In this respect the fight very closely resembles that between Arbuckle Bros. and the Sugar Trust. Several years ago the Arbuckles decided to enter the sugar business and the Sugar Trust, in revenge, acquired the Woolson Spice Co. and began to exploit package coffee. Both concerns lost money until the controversy settled itself, but both are now selling coffee and sugar at a profit.

Rio and Santos Coffee Selling Campaign Under Way.

New Board of Brazilians Appointed to Push Sale of Brazilian Coffee All Over the World. Will Advertise and Demonstrate Coffees in Various Markets.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 10, 1908.

The campaign to increase the consumption of Rio and Santos coffee in all the markets of the world, described in a recent issue of this paper, is now officially launched. News comes to the State Department that the President of the State of Sao Paulo, Brazil, has issued a decree organizing the "Coffee Propaganda Service," creating a new board and attaching it to the Department of Agriculture, Commerce and Public Works. The Board's chief functions are as follows:—

To study the conditions of the consuming markets and to lay before the Secretary of Agriculture such proposals as they may consider advisable for the stimulation of consumption, either by developing existing markets or conquering new ones, and for defense against fraud and imitations.

To be constantly studying every possible measure for the propaganda of coffee and to devise means whereby the advantages of using coffee may become more widely known, and to point out to the consumer the drawbacks to himself of using substitutes and imitations.

To direct and superintend the service of propaganda for increasing the consumption of coffee and to see that the companies who have contracted for this service with the State carry out their obligations in a satisfactory manner.

To organize traveling propaganda exhibitions to visit the principal markets under the direction of a member of the board to show the various products of the State and to exhibit on the cinematograph views illustrative of our development and civilization, our agriculture and our industries.

Two members of the board shall take it in turns to travel abroad so that they may always be in touch with the propaganda campaign.

Grants in aid of coffee propaganda shall be made to private individuals or companies who conform to the regulations of this decree.

Grants shall be made for a maximum period of five (5) years in cash or kind—coffee—the price of the latter to be fixed by Government.

Grants of cash shall not exceed 20 per cent. of the capital of the contracting company, nor shall grants of coffee (of a value not exceeding the said percentage) be made until after the money grant has been used up.

Grants shall be made by preference to companies of a national character or whose object is the development of national products.

The trade-mark of the contracting parties shall be authenticated by Government and it shall not be changed while the contract is in force.

Only coffee from the State of Sao Paulo shall be dealt in.

The types of coffee to be used—raw, roasted, in bean, or ground—to which the official mark of the State shall be affixed shall be subject to the approval of the administrative board.

It is expected that representatives of the Brazilian coffee growers will very shortly begin a campaign in the United States, intended to bring Rio and Santos coffee into greater favor. The Brazilians contend that their finer grades of Santos are equal to almost any coffee. They further say that while Santos coffee is sold at a low price it is usually sold as Santos, but that large quantities of it are sold as substitutes for higher grades under the names of the higher grades. The aim will be to have it sold for Santos coffee always, so that Brazil will get the credit.

More Controversy Over What is a Sardine

French Packers Formally Protest Again at the American Ruling Practically Permitting Every Small Fish to be Called a Sardine.

Advices were received from France during the week that the French sardine packers were again agitating the question of the wide latitude which a recent ruling of the United States Department of Agriculture gives for the packing of other fish as sardines. At a Congress of the largest sardine packers in France, held during the week, a formal protest was drawn up which will be forwarded to the United States Government.

The French sardine packers have always claimed that they used the only real sardine in existence. The fish which the Norwegian packers pack under the name sardine, the Frenchmen contend is really a pilchard and not a sardine at all. The claim is also made that the fish used by the American sardine packers is really a young herring.

In spite of this the United States Department of Agriculture recently handed down the following decision:—

LABELING OF SARDINES.

Many inquiries have been made of this Department respecting the extent to which the term "sardine" can be used in food products entering into foreign or interstate commerce. The question of the proper labeling of fish of this kind was submitted by the Department to the Department of Commerce and Labor, Bureau of Fisheries. After reviewing the nomenclature and trade practices the Department of Commerce and Labor reached the following conclusion:—

Commercially, the name sardine has come to signify any small, canned, clupeoid fish; and the methods of preparation are so various that it is impossible to establish any absolute standard of quality. It appears to this Department that the purposes of the pure food law will be carried out and the public fully protected if all sardines bear labels showing the place where produced and the nature of the ingredients used in preserving or flavoring the fish.

In harmony with the opinion of the experts of the Bureau of Fisheries, the Department of Agriculture holds that the term "sardine" may be applied to any small fish described above, and that the name of "sardine" should be accompanied with the name of the country or State in which the fish are taken and prepared, and with a statement of the nature of the ingredients used in preserving or flavoring the fish.

It is held that a small fish of the clupeoid family, caught upon or near the shores of and packed in oil in Norway, or smoked and packed, in oil, is properly labeled with the phrase "Norwegian Sardines in Oil," or "Norwegian Smoked Sardines in Oil," the nature of the oil being designated. In like manner a small fish of the clupeoid family caught upon or near the shores of and packed in France may be called "French Sardines in Oil," the nature of the oil being specified. Following the same practice, a fish of the clupeoid family caught on or near the shores of and packed in the United States may be labeled "American Sardines Packed in Oil," or "Maine Sardines Packed in Oil," or be given some similar appellation, the nature of the oil being stated. It is suggested that the name of the particular fish to which the term sardine is to be applied should also be placed upon the label—for example, "Pilchard," "Herring," etc.

The decision did not please the French packers and they have never been entirely reconciled to it. Naturally, a decision that the only real sardine was a French sardine would have given them a tremendous advantage. It is not thought likely, however, that they will succeed in their efforts to overturn the existent condition.

Callanan After Underweight Raisin Packages. Says Both California and Foreign Raisins are Way Off. Stopped Sale of Package Raisins on this Account. Grocers' Association Will Go After the Matter. Small News of the New York Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, April 10, 1908.

Seeded raisins from California and imported table raisins are commonly received here in underweight packages and are so sold to the public. This is the assertion made by L. J. Callanan, the chairman of the Legislative Committee of the New York Retail Grocers' Union, who proposes to do something more than to talk on the subject.

The subject has come up incidental to the discussion of the proposed State law requiring that the exact weight or quantity be stamped on all packages or containers of food and other commodities. The editorial in last week's number of the "Grocery World" had just been read by Mr. Callanan when he was visited by your correspondent. The Vesey street grocer said that he agreed fully with the views expressed in this editorial and he was glad that attention had been called so forcibly to the flimsy nature of the arguments used by the Wholesale Grocers' Association against the bill.

"There is no doubt at all," said Mr. Callanan, "that the public would prefer to buy packages with the weight or quantity marks instead of buying by the package merely. It is the manufacturers and not the public who have brought about the system of selling by the package and not by the weight or quantity.

"There are no kinds of food sold in containers on which it is not practicable to stamp the exact weight, except canned goods that are hermetically sealed. The canning must be done so rapidly that there will always be variations in the quantity put into cans of the same size.

"The claims as to evaporation are nonsensical. The canned food does not lose in weight and the only difficulty with this kind of food is in getting the same quantity into the cans at the beginning, and that cannot be done. There is no evaporation of other kinds of food that prevents a correct stamping of the quantity.

"I bought 100 boxes of California seeded raisins last fall. When I put them on the scales one box weighed 17 ounces, gross, and two weighed each 16 ounces, gross. The others varied all the way down to 13½ ounces gross.

"These raisins I sent back, because of the short weight. Five other boxes more were sent to me and I sent them back because they were short in weight. Since then I have obtained some that average 15½ ounces in gross weight, and that is the best that I can get from the California people. These boxes should each weigh 16 ounces, net.

"This season I have been weighing the imported raisins that come in strips of paper. They average in weight between 13 or 13½ ounces and 14½ ounces. Because of this condition of affairs, I finally stopped selling raisins as put up by the shippers in this form. Instead, I have been buying boxes of 22 pounds in loose form and have been putting up my own pound packages, each containing a full 16 ounces. I find that the 22-pound boxes are pretty nearly up to the full weight.

"In buying the imported raisins tied with strips of paper each supposed to contain a pound, the retailer buys 20 in a box. I have searched everywhere, through brokers and by buying in other stores, and am confident that these raisins are regularly sold all through New York in the short-weight form in which they came to me until I ceased buying them.

"As the Government collects a duty on these raisins, I believe that there is a way compelling the shippers to state the weights accurately. The customs authorities should not pass packages which are short of the weight which they are supposed to contain. The Federal food law may also be invoked to stop this practice."

It is Mr. Callanan's purpose to offer resolutions on the subject at meetings of grocers' organizations in this city and to have the matter brought to the attention of the Federal authorities.

The borough of Brooklyn received this week bids on 4,000 gross cakes of soap for use in the public baths and comfort stations and for 100 boxes of laundry soap for public buildings and 30 gross cakes of soap, oatmeal brand, for the use of city employees.

The bids were, for supplying the entire quantity: Colgate & Co., $4,545; the Hemphill Co., of England, $5,382; Manhattan Supply Co., $3,825; J. F. Reichard & Co., $4,055; John F. Donovan, $3,815. It is claimed that the higher bidders are prepared to furnish better qualities than will be furnished if one of the lower bids are accepted, but it is likely that the lowest bidder will get the contract.

Permits from the Board of Health must be obtained after this before dealers will be allowed to sell oysters in this city. The Board adopted the regulation too late to have much effect on the present season's business, but it is expected to have the oyster trade well under control by the opening of the next season. The object is to protect the public from the sale of oysters raised in beds that have been contaminated, and it is believed that one result will be an increase of public confidence in the oyster as a desirable article of food.

This May Mean Revolution in Handling Food Fish

German Fish Company Have Found a Way to Ship Fish Alive Instead of Dead and is Said to be Willing to Extend Their Plan to the United States. Fish are Fed with Oxygen While En Route.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 10, 1908.

Every wholesale and retail dealer in fish will be interested in a report of the German method of shipping fish not dead as in this country, but alive. The report has just been filed here by Special Agent G. L. Carden, of the United States Revenue Cutter Service.

It seems that after considerable experiment, transportation of live fish for market purposes is now an established fact in Germany. Under the Erlwein system which is now being operated on the Prussian State railways the fish are being hauled over considerable distances. Briefly the new system permits of a proportion of two tons of fish to one ton of water, and, in instances, as many as four tons of fish have been transported alive in one and a half tons of water. This means that the fish have been packed in almost like sardines. Under the Erlwein system oxygen is forced through the fish tank by means of a circulating pump, and the carbonic acid as exhaled in breathing is absorbed by lime plates. So far only fresh water fish are being transported, but it is the intention to take up the transportation alive of salt water fish. Before this latter result can be effected it will be necessary to equip many of the sea-going fishery vessels with wells or tanks such as are seen in many of the Boston fishing vessels.

German law does not permit of fresh water fish being offered for sale except alive. It is common to see in restaurants tanks of fresh water fish on exhibition in the windows. The law is aimed against the dangers of fish poisoning. It is the opinion in Germany that fresh fish could be transported readily from New York to any one of the large cities in the Mississippi Valley, and, in turn, the fish of the Great Lakes could be transported alive all over the West. Mr. Carden understands that the German company is quite ready to negotiate for American connections to build these fish cars in America.

The sale of fish in Germany is a very important one. It is recognized that the food is not only good and cheap, but offers a ready substitute for meat which, at the high prices now demanded, is placed beyond the reach of many of the poorer people. As originally designed the Erlwein system provided for what is known as a "wet and dry storage." In one instance there was practically no water used. In its present form, however, the tanks only carry enough water to keep the fish moist. The tanks may be constructed of either wood or metal, and the great value of the method lies in the ability to transport a great number of live fish in a comparatively small space.

The Decline of Chicory.

The presence of a good-sized advertisement of a German brand of chicory in a local newspaper directs the attention to the almost total eclipse which has overtaken the sale of chicory to the American trade in the last ten years.

Before the enforcement of the food laws became vigorous enormous quantities of chicory were sold mixed with coffee, the admixture having the double purpose of cheapening and improving the flavor. Its use was not confined to cheap brands, but extended to some of the highest-priced brands of coffee sold ground.

To-day the situation is vastly changed. Food laws now make it impossible, or at least impracticable, to sell as coffee a blend of coffee and chicory. Such a mixture can be sold if it reveals its real character, but revelation means to the American coffee consumer the absolute destruction of its atractiveness. With him ignorance was bliss. He enjoyed his doctored coffee up to the very minute that he learned it was doctored, but not one minute after.

Chicory is still used very largely by foreigners, but with the better class, always knowingly. And as the foreign population increases, the product may be able to recoup some of the trade it has lost by being crowded out of the American trade. So far as being consumed by the native American is concerned, however, it is probably an outlawed product.

Who Wins?

The net result of the brilliant move of the Procter & Gamble Co., which has been discussed in the last two issues of the "Grocery World," can now be estimated with a fair degree of accuracy. In a nutshell, the move was this: Heretofore the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association and the chain stores had bought Ivory soap at the quantity price of $6.50 through a jobber. From now on the chain stores will continue to buy that way and at that price, but the Retail Grocers' Association, a much larger buyer than any of them, will be given only the 20-case price of $6.80, even though it buys ten times twenty cases.

The results of the move have been so overwhelmingly splendid that the "Grocery World" feels constrained to congratulate everybody concerned, particularly the Wholesale Grocers' Association, which brought it about. The sharers in the boon reap benefits as follows:—

The Procter & Gamble Co., without the slightest benefit either to themselves or the jobbers whom they sought to befriend at the expense of the retailers, gain the ill will of one thousand association grocers in Philadelphia and suburbs. That comes from continuing to give the chain stores a quantity price which is denied the Retail Grocers' Association on even a larger quantity.

The Wholesale Grocers' Association gets the benefit which comes from turning the Retail Grocers' Association, hitherto a quiescent factor, into an active disturbing influence with a tremendous power for demoralizing the market. While the retail association was given the quantity price, it considered itself in honor bound to maintain the jobbing price, and it therefore listed Ivory soap to its members at $7, the regular jobbing price, though under no contract to do so. More, no direct rebate was ever given on it. But now that it is denied the quantity price, all incentive to hold the list price disappears, and on all soap purchased from now on the association's straight price to members will be $6.80. This is 20 cents below what it was before, and 20 cents below the price of any jobber who keeps his contract. Thus is the jobbing market demoralized by the jobbers' short-sighted selfishness!

The members of the Retail Grocers' Association get a better deal than they got before, for while under the old arrangement they were charged the list price of $7 for their soap, they now pay $6.80, 20 cents less, we say again, than they can buy of any other jobber, and 20 cents less than any direct price they have ever gotten from the association itself.

Did anybody ever see a prettier muddle? It simply shows what cold-blooded selfishness can do when unmixed with brains and forethought. Wisdom would have solved the problem by recognizing the Retail Grocers' Association as a jobber, which it unquestionably is, and then putting it under the same agreement to hold the price that other jobbers are put under.

Small Selfishness.

Several days ago R. E. Lee, editor of the "Eli Grocer," St. Louis, Mo., was asked by a subscriber for his opinion as to the righteousness of the parcels post bills now before Congress. He rendered and published an opinion which was in part as follows:—

> Any parcels post measure is dangerous. The one which has been fathered by the Postmaster-General is an innocent measure in itself and it must be confessed that it holds out to the retail merchant in the interior town a sop, but— all sops are dangerous.
> Let us suppose that we had a parcels post which could be used only on free delivery routes. Of what use would it be to the retail merchant in Joplin or Carthage or Webb City?
> Do you want the farmers within ten miles of you to order by phone or letter and you send out the orders by parcels post at your expense?
> Or, do you want that farmer to come to town on court day or other day which you will make attractive for him and his women? Do you not, in point of fact, want him and his women to come into town so that the grocer can show him a lot of food supplies and brooms and washboards and washing machines, and the hardware man show him hatchets and hammers and small hardware, and the harness man show him a new wrinkle in harness, and the vehicle and implement man show him a harvester or catch his fancy with a nice buggy, while the dry goods man is beguiling his women folks with dress goods and notions and hair combs and a hundred and one things that he would not buy and they would not buy if the actual goods were not shown to them in the store?
> Would not your sales as retail merchants be cut down 50 to 75 per cent. if you deprive yourself of the opportunity of temptingly displaying your wares instead of the talking about them over the telephone or waiting until they were ordered without any solicitation, by mail? Would the farmer order by mail? Would he buy anything but bare necessities unless you get him close enough to you to practice salesmanship on him? I think not.

If the retail merchants of the country oppose parcels post for any such small and selfish reason as this, their cause will fail. And indeed it would deserve to fail. Opening the mails to merchandise is progress; that cannot be denied. In order to oppose successfully a movement which comprehends progress its opponents must bring forward something more than a selfish whine that if goods can be ordered by telephone and delivered by mail customers will be less likely to come to the store. If that is an argument against anything, it is an argument against the telephone.

Retail merchants have no need to resort to such petty reasoning—there is a principle involved. A general parcels post law, such as the Kean Bill, published last week, would give to the Chicago mail-order houses facilities for undermining the business of the local retail dealer, on whom rural prosperity largely depends, and in whom is unquestionably the right to protection against almost invincible odds. There is nothing selfish about that, and for that reason it is strong. The other argument would never give the retailers standing anywhere.

Coming.

The canned goods packers are coming to see the truth of future canned goods sales; to see, in other words, how ridiculous and unbusiness-like much of the modern future business is. The Western Canned Goods Packers' Association, with which are affiliated some of the largest packers of the United States, decided last week that no future corn or tomatoes would be sold before June 1, 1908. That is not as complete a reform as it should be, nevertheless it is a step in the right direction. Corn and tomatoes sold in June are still in the air, since the crops of both do not mature until after that. Nevertheless, some idea, at any rate, can be gotten then of crop conditions.

The "Grocery World" will not be in the least surprised when the time comes that a large percentage of the packers at least will refuse to sell canned goods until they are in existence to sell.

Why Has Fresh Meat Advanced?

The United States Congress is About to Officially Ask this Question. Resolution Introduced by Nebraska Member Calling on Department of Commerce and Labor for Information.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 10, 1908.

If a resolution, introduced in the House by Mr. Hitchcock, of Nebraska, on Tuesday, is favorably acted upon, the Congress of the United States will shortly make an investigation into the present very high prices of fresh meat all over the country.

The resolution which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, was as follows:—

> Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be directed to transmit to the House, if not incompatible with the public interest, full statistical information gathered by the department under authority of law, showing the price each month during the last two years of the leading meat products made and packed at the leading packing house centres of the country by companies and corporations engaged in commerce between the States, together with the prices paid by said corporations and companies for live stock each month during the said period, so arranged as to show the relationship between the price paid by said companies for the live stock and the prices charged by them for meat products.

So radical has been the advance in meat during the last three months that the attention of Congress has been attracted to it. Charges of combination and restraint of trade have been made, and it is likely that the above resolution may lead to another investigation.

First Quarter of 1908 Disastrous Business Record.

Official Report Shows Fifty Per Cent. Increase in Commercial Failures. Believed to be Due to Business Depression.

According to an official report of mercantile failures for the first three months of 1908, there was a notable increase in the number as compared with the same months of 1907. The total in the entire United States was 4,909 failures in the first quarter of 1908, as against 3,136 for the same period of 1907. The liabilities of the 4,909 were $75,706,191; of the 3,136, $32,075,591.

The reports of failures in the various States for the same periods of the two years are as follows:—

Fruit Evaporator Tells Pennsylvania Food Commissioner About Sulphur Bleach

Says that Sulphur Poisons the Fruit so that Even Insects Won't Touch It. Oleo Campaigns in Philadelphia and Pittsburg. Reports of Month's Work and of State Chemists.

The current issue of the Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Bulletin, copy of which has just been received, contains an interesting letter from Jacob F. Ryder, of Waynesboro, Pa., on the subject of bleaching dried fruit with sulphur. Mr. Ryder shows himself thoroughly posted on the subject, and opposed the use of the bleach. His letter is as follows:—

Waynesboro, Pa., March 6, 1908.
Mr. James Foust, Dairy and Food Commissioner, Harrisburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:—I have your letter of March 2d, and in reply will say that nothing could have pleased me more than to have found the time to have written you a more descriptive letter in relation to the use and abuse of the sulphur process in bleaching fresh fruits preparatory to evaporation. But you are at perfect liberty to quote me as saying that the use of sulphur and all other bleaches, as salt water, benzoate of soda, etc., should be vigorously discouraged, especially the present methods of using sulphur, and the length of time that the first prepared fruit is subjected to the fumes of the burning sulphur, which is termed sulphurous acid gas which in turn is a corrosive poison.

To make a test put one pound each, sulphur bleached dried apples, salt water and evaporated apples unbleached as per sample I sent you, or in other words use three one-gallon stone jars or any other convenient receptacle and put into each jar one pound of each kind of fruit to which add two quarts of water, allowing the jars with the fruit and water to stand for 48 hours in a room where the temperature is below that which causes fermentation, then by tasting the juice or cider of each and by sachrameter weigh the juices and determine the specific gravity and the amount of sugar in each, or by chemical analysis you will find surprising results.

In the first place in all of the commercial apple evaporating plants (as the evaporators used for this purpose are wholly unadapted for evaporating any other fruits except the apple), the apples are pared, cored and trimmed. From the trimmers the apples pass into the bleacher, which is provided with a series of five or six boxes, each holding from two to three bushels of fruit, and as these boxes, filled with fruit, follow each other, in consecutive order, through a horizontal flue or bleaching box with a pot of burning sulphur underneath, from which the fumes, sulphurous acid gas, pass upward and into the bleacher, thus saturating the pared and cored apples so thoroughly that all bruised places in the ripe fruit and the very hard green fruit all comes out of the bleacher white and so thoroughly poisoned that flies, gnats and other insects, including the honey bee, will not go near the fruit that is intended to enter into the stomachs of the unsuspecting consumers. While on the other hand, just outside of the evaporator building you will find myriads of bees, flies, gnats and other insects helping themselves to the cores and skins (parings) that have just been removed from the apples in the pile of bleached fruit inside of the building, waiting its turn to go into the so-called evaporator.

Even should the bleached fruit lie for several days, no fly or insect will touch it, simply because it is poison, whether apples are evaporated as "whole stock" or cut into ring slices, from the whole fruit after being bleached, from which little, if any, of the sulphur fumes can be dissipated in the process of evaporation, by the present process of cold bleaching, and kiln drying.

Being familiar with all kinds of farm, orchard, dairy, evaporating, canning and packing house food products, I feel justified in saying that in none of these have the actual food values been so completely changed by adulteration and artificial coloring matter as the commercial evaporated fruit products, more especially the apple, which by the indiscriminate use of sulphur has in many instances been rendered wholly unfit for food.

The proper way to evaporate fruit is by exposing all cut surfaces of the fresh prepared fruit to continuous currents of heated air in such a manner as to dry off the cut or exposed surfaces of the fresh fruit and thus form an artificial skin or cuticle, covering the fruit and preventing the escape of the volatile fruit flavor and developing the saccharine or fruit sugar as near as is possible to be accomplished in an evaporator.

Very respectfully,
JACOB F. RYDER.

In same number of the bulletin the Commissioner sums up his impressions of the oleo campaign he has been carrying on in Philadelphia and Pittsburg as follows:—

Recent remonstrances from dealers in pure butter in the counties of Allegheny and Philadelphia led the Dairy and Food Commissioner to set on foot investigations which revealed extensive violations of law. In Allegheny county less than one hundred of the dealers got into the habit of purchasing the uncolored oleomargarine and coloring it themselves, thus defrauding the National government out of nine and three-quarter cents revenue on each pound and violating the law of Pennsylvania. This colored product was marketed as genuine creamery butter, but it was sold at a price which practically drove genuine butter out of the market. After careful investigation had revealed something of the situation several arrests were made and prosecutions instituted. It is the firm resolve of those having the matter in charge to push these prosecutions with all possible vigor and to refuse to transfer the licenses of chronic offenders.

The situation in Philadelphia has been much more complex. The dealers in pure butter found themselves confronted by a competition which was selling "pure creamery butter" at much lower prices that they could afford. Complaint was made to Dairy and Food Commissioner Foust who at once set on foot investigations which revealed the existence of a formidable combination cunningly organized and practicing the same violations of law detected in the Pittsburg cases. It may be added here that every effort will be made to break up this unlawful combination to deceive the public and injure legitimate trade. The whole power of the State will be invoked and an effort made to secure the infliction of the heaviest penalties authorized by law.

CONTRASTS

A clothing merchant once started out a tramp in the most disreputable-looking apparel—so bad that every one turned to look at him. On his back was a sign: "Wear Brown's clothes and you won't look like this."

He was advertising by contrast—and the ad. was a good one.

A good many well-meaning grocers are advertising the other fellow in the same way.

They run stores which are good stores, but they haven't kept abreast of all the details of modern merchandising; and the result is that in competition with the store having up-to-date time and labor and money-saving fixtures and methods of service the contrast hurts them, and they lose trade.

The American Slicing Machine will make the other fellow advertise YOU.

Let the housewife compare the even, uniform slices of bacon or ham, or dried beef, cut just the thickness she desires, without handling, with the uneven chunks sawed off by hand in a hurry.

If she ever goes to another store again the contrast will send her back to you in a hurry.

Better profit on each sale for you, too.

Nine thousand merchants have proved it.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change for the week. The demand is simply fair, being a steady business for actual wants only. Prices throughout rule on exactly the same basis as a week ago, low grades being the firmest on the list. The season will probably reach its close without any special change from now on.

Coffee.

The coffee market is very dull. The only notable feature is the continued scarcity of good Santos. There is no scarcity of low grades; in fact they are slightly weaker. Brazil options are unchanged, and there is practically no quotable market change. The demand for coffee is only moderate. Milds are steady and unchanged. Java steady. Mocha shows a decline of about ½ cent for the past month.

Sugar.

The sugar market is still very firm, and another advance in refined is inevitable. Cuban raws have advanced another notch during the past week, and European raws also, though toward the week the latter ruled slightly weaker on account of the high prices having brought out an unexpected quantity of raw sugar. Refined sugar shows no change for the week, but may advance at any moment. The consumptive demand is fair.

The entire refined market advanced 10 points just as the "Grocery World" went to press.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup is flat and unchanged in price. Sugar syrup is in excellent demand, both for home and export trade, practically the entire output being absorbed as rapidly as produced. Molasses is dull and steady, the season being for the most part over.

Fish.

The market for the week shows no change. All grades of Norway mackerel, as well as Irish, rule at steadily maintained prices, and are in fair demand at the price. No large lots are moving. Fresh mackerel is beginning to be caught off our own shores, and the new shore mackerel season will now be on very shortly. Cod, hake and haddock are in light demand at unchanged prices. Domestic sardines on spot are unchanged and dull. Future prices have not yet been named by most packers, but are likely to be almost any time. Salmon is quiet and rules unchanged. Foreign sardines are firm and scarce.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are easy, both spot and future. There is no change to report in quotations, but the general tendency is unquestionably weak, and even lower prices, both spot and future, are by no means unlikely. Corn is dull and weak also. The demand is very light. Spot peas are weak and dull, although futures are maintained. Apples are nominally unchanged, but it is believed that concessions could be obtained on a good round lot. Peaches are still scarce, dull and high. Baltimore canned goods show no change in price and the demand is fair. Packers are anticipating an active packing season in all lines. California canned goods are dull, both from first and second hands.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are easy and offers have been made during the week as low as a 2¼-cent basis. This is equivalent to a decline of ¼ cent. The demand is very light. Peaches are dull at much reduced prices, though the week has brought no further declines. Apricots are scarce and still very high. Some imported French apricots of rather poor quality brought 12 cents during the week. Currants are quiet at unchanged prices. Raisins are still very dull and weak. Citron has declined ½ cent more and is dull. Dates and figs are dull and unchanged. Apples are quiet at ruling prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans average $2.35 for the domestic grades in a large way, the imported being worth $2 to $2.05. The demand is fair. Marrows rule unchanged from last week and the demand is fair. California limas do not seem to be very steady, various prices being quoted, some sales, presumably for rain-damaged goods, being made below 5 cents. Split peas are growing scarce, and the price is firm. Green and Scotch peas are in light supply and firm.

Butter.

Both tub and print butter is firm at an advance of about 2 cents per pound higher than a

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

week ago, all grades being affected. The continued short supply is the cause, the production being invariably short at this time of year. Present conditions are likely to exist for about two weeks, after which the supply will increase and prices will decline.

Eggs.

The egg market is steady at unchanged prices. The receipts are about normal for the season, speculators taking everything at the market price. The quality of eggs now being received is the best for the year. As long as the weather continues cool there will probably be a firm market at unchanged prices.

Cheese.

The cheese market is stationary. The demand is fairly active, and stocks in storage are steadily decreasing. Under-grade cheese are in very light supply, and prices will probably rule unchanged until new cheese is available in about six weeks.

Provisions.

Everything in the smoked line is very firm at unchanged prices. The demand is good, as is usual at the Easter season. The receipts of hogs are lighter than they have been, and if there is any change it will probably be a slight advance. Both pure and compound lard are firm at unchanged prices. Barrel pork, canned meats and dried beef are unchanged and steady.

Produce.

York State potatoes, 85 to 95 cents per bushel; Pennsylvania potatoes, 90 cents to $1 per bushel, demand good; sweet potatoes, $1.10 to $1.20 per basket; seconds, 50 to 65 cents per basket, demand fair; Ohio globe onions, $1 per basket; York State, 90 cents to $1 per basket; Bermudas, $1.75 to $2 per crate, demand good; Spanish, small crates, 75 cents to $1; large crates, $1.25, demand slow; carrots, $2 per barrel, 40 cents per basket, demand fair; yellow turnips, 30 to 35 cents per basket; white, 25 to 30 cents per basket, demand fair; beets, $1 to $1.25 per barrel, demand slow; Danish cabbage, $12 to $15 per ton, $1 to $1.25 per barrel, demand fair; watercress, $1.50 to $2.50 per 100 bunches, demand fair; oyster plants, $2.50 to $3 per barrel, demand fair; scullions, $1 to $1.25 per 100 bunches, demand good; spinach, 80 cents to $1.15 per barrel, demand fair; horseradish, $3 to $3.50 per barrel, demand fair; salad, 2½ to 4 cents per bunch, demand fair; radishes, 3 to 4 cents per bunch, demand good.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, jumbo, $1.75 to $2.25 per bunch; firsts, $1.50 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1.10 to $1.30 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 cents to $1 per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per bunch, demand poor; lemons, $2.50 to $2.75 per box, demand fair; California oranges, $2.75 to $3.50 per box, demand good; Floridas, $2.50 to $3.50 per box, demand good; grapefruit, $2 to $5 per box, demand fair; apples, Baldwins, $2 to $3.50 per barrel; Hulbersons, $2.75 to $3 per barrel; Spy, $2.75 to $3 per barrel; Spitz, $3.50 per barrel; Kings, $5 per barrel; Russets, $2.50 to $2.75 per barrel, demand fair to good.

Nuts.

Peanuts, roasted, choice, $1.05 per bushel; fancy, $1.30 per bushel; jumbo, $1.55 per bushel; green, choice, 4¼ cents per pound; fancy, 5½ cents per pound; jumbo, 6½ cents per pound, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazil, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 9¾ cents per pound; walnuts, 12½ to 14 cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

Continued dullness this week was the only feature of the canned goods market here. In the face of the very small demand for the general line of goods it is remarkable how well the prices hold up. They have reached the point evidently where the canners are determined to carry the goods into the coming canning season rather than name any lower prices. During the week tomatoes was about the only article that sold in straight carload lots. The demand for them was small, comparatively, but the encouraging feature about it is the fact that the buying orders came from nearly all sections of the country, which means that there is a large field for the canners to cover when the market resumes its usual activity.

In all lines of fruits and vegetables the buying was of the same character as heretofore, and the market is rather in the buyer's favor. In some lines of goods the asking prices can probably be shaded.

The sales of "future" goods of all kinds up to this date have been smaller than in any season for a very long time, but the jobbers are now commencing to show more interest in them.

THOS. J. MEEHAN & Co.
Baltimore, Md.

Spices.

The market has been fairly active. Buying has been quite satisfactory for actual needs; little has been done in futures. Stocks in our country are small; in fact, lower than they have been for years.

Pepper.—The market has strengthened since our last letter. Price has been marked up fully ⅛ to ¼ cent. This especially applies to Lampong. We have just had some news pertaining to the fact that we will have moderate crops of Acheen, Singapore and Lampong peppers, although it is predicted that the crop of Singapore and Siam white will be smaller.

Cayenne is very steady and prices are firm. The tendency is upward.

Cloves.—Practically no change in the situation. There is very little in our country and all arrivals are quickly taken up.

Pimento (Allspice).—Very active and considerable buying on account of present low values, which we consider very safe.

Mace is in small supply and prices are therefore very firm.

Nutmegs continue dull at only limited demand. Prices are practically unchanged.

Cassias.—No changes to note. Demand very fair, which will increase from now on. China Cassia is exceedingly scarce.

Gingers unchanged during the week. Demand fair.

Seeds.—Caraway unchanged during the week. Market very firm. Celery, mustard and coriander in fair demand at same prices as heretofore in effect.

McCORMICK & Co., INC.
Baltimore, Md.

California Fruits.

Present conditions in California indicate the best fruit crops known in many years, and unless something unforeseen happens there will be the heaviest apricot crop that we have had in three years, and it may be predicted that prices on canned and dried apricots will be materially lower than they have been for several years, possibly 35 per cent. below last year on the average. The prices on apricots that ruled during the past two seasons were so high as to restrict consumption to a very marked degree. Stocks are completely exhausted.

Peaches.—The present outlook is for the largest and best crop of peaches we have had in California for several seasons. The fruit is now so far matured that growers do not fear very much damage from cold spring rains, as was the case during the past few years, but it must be taken into consideration that stocks are entirely exhausted.

Cherries and Plums.—Indications point to good crops.

Pears.—Spot stocks completely exhausted. Indications are for average crop only, possibly equal in quantity to last year (1907).

Resumé.—While at present conditions could hardly be better (with prospects for seasonable rains during April), yet it will require good crops to replenish stocks, which are practically bare. The 1908 prices on canned and dried fruits will be lower, as it is a foregone conclusion that buyers will be conservative in their purchases.

Should fruit trees be overloaded, unless growers vigorously thin their trees, the size of the fruit will be too small and will be difficult of sale at any price.

Prices for fruit crops will rule low this year on account of the ultra-conservative attitude of commercial banks, both here and in the interior, which will result in many canners and dried fruit packers being unable to finance their 1908 business, and as dried fruit packers have met with very serious losses this past season they will be compelled to be ultra-conservative the coming season. The speculative feature will be largely eliminated, as financial conditions will result in materially curtailing the output, and packers and dried fruit men will not be in a position to carry heavy stocks for buyers.

California Canneries Co.
San Francisco, Cal.

MARKET NOTES.

Florida tomatoes have not so far had a very good season. The quality of most of the receipts has been poor. At present the price ranges from $1.50 to $2.50, and anything good sells well. Fancy tomatoes will bring $3, but are very scarce.

Florida strawberries, which have been unusually abundant all the season, are even more abundant now, and the price has dropped to 15 to 20 cents per quart. As much as five cars have reached Philadelphia in one day. Last year the price at this time was 25 to 35 cents. Naturally the low prices have increased the consumption.

There are no new Florida potatoes in market, though there probably will be within two weeks. Bermudas are in good demand at $6.50 per barrel. The supply is not large.

Asparagus is coming both from California and the South. California asparagus ranges from $2.50 to $3.50 per dozen and is in good demand. Southern ranges from 20 to 35 cents per bunch. The general demand is good.

Rhubarb is mostly near-by and ranges from 5 to 15 cents per bunch. The demand is good.

Florida peas have a wide range—$1 to $2.75. The demand takes everything good.

Florida string beans are high. The best brings $4, the poorest about $2. Good beans are wanted.

Radishes are in large supply and fair stock has been offered as low as $1.50 per barrel, which is not ½ cent per bunch. Good stock ranges from 2½ to 3 cents per bunch.

Written for the "Grocery World."

Believes in Retailers Standing Alone

A Country Retailer Contends that it is Wrong in Principle for Manufacturers to Concern Themselves with Retailers' Profits. Every Dealer Should be Compelled to Stand Alone. If Unable to Stand Alone He Should Retire in Favor of Those Who Can.

I was greatly interested in the account in the last issue of the "Grocery World" of the action of the Great Western Cereal Co., manufacturers of Mother's Oats, in attempting to induce retail grocers to sell Mother's Oats at 12 cents. I am a retail grocer, and I do not believe in such moves. I do not suppose that the Great Western Cereal Co. is doing this to help the grocer alone, but from business reasons. The grocer who gets 12 cents for Mother's Oats will naturally be better satisfied with it as a profitable product than if conditions compelled him to sell it for 10 cents. The manufacturer, therefore, naturally desires to make the grocer as well satisfied with his product as he can, and thus cause him to push it.

No matter what the motive, however, I am not in favor of any such moves. As a retailer I am perfectly willing to stand on my own feet. I believe all other retailers, whether willing to or not, should be made to stand on their own feet. If we were all obliged to stand alone it would be a case of the survival of the fittest. Those not strong enough to stand alone would fall, and the market would rightfully belong to those left.

In other words, if I am unable to sell goods at a profit, I am not worthy of help from outside, I am a lame duck, and no amount of outside help will ever make me any less a lame duck.

I am aware that the majority of the retail trade will not agree with the view I am about to express now, but I am nevertheess sincere in it. In a way the manufacturer's suggestion as to what price a retailer should get for his own goods is an unwaranted interference with another man's business. A manufacturer sells his goods outright to the jobber, the jobber sells them outright to the retailer. They belong to the retailer absolutely and he has the exclusive right to say what they shall be sold for. If he has not sufficient ability to turn them over at a profit, then he has no place in business and should retire in favor of those who have. The manufacturer would be perfectly justified, in my judgment, in rejecting all requests from retailers to set the price at all. All that can reasonably be asked of him is that he shall do nothing to hinder the retailer in getting a profit. If he refrains from interfering, he would have a perfect right to say to the retailer: "These goods are yours. I have no more control over them than Theodore Roosevelt. I got my profit out of them, it is up to you to do likewise."

Why the Sale Fell Through.

Secretary Schwarz, of the Geneva, Ill., Business Men's Association, Writes the "Grocery World" that the Proposed Bad Debt Sale Didn't Take Place. "They Must Have Paid Up."

Floating about the trade press for many weeks has been the following item:—

> The sale of about $30,000 worth of "bad" grocery, butcher, drygoods and other bills at public auction is the unique plan decided upon by the Geneva, Ill., Business Men's Association.
> At a meeting of the association it was decided to take this step as a means of securing a settlement on the bills. April 1 in front of the Geneva State Bank building, the first auction will be held.
> Thirty days' notice will be given to delinquents of more than one year. If a settlement is not secured at the end of this time the bills will be offered for sale to the highest bidder, the purchaser to take his chances of collecting. Thirty business concerns are interested in this plan.

The sequel is told in the following correspondence:—

> Philadelphia, March 28, 1908.
> Secretary The Business Men's Association, Geneva, Illinois.
> Dear Sir:—The "Grocery World" is extremely interested in the published statement that your organization will on April 1st, hold an auction sale of delinquent bills owed the members.
> We would esteem it a very great favor if you would be good enough to advise us after the sale, as to such success as it might have had, average amount obtained for bills of this class, whether it induced the settlement of such accounts in advance and so on.
> Kindly use the inclosed stamp envelope for your reply and if at any time we can reciprocate, please command us.
> Yours very truly,
> E. J. Buckley.

The answer of Secretary W. A. Schwarz was laconic but interesting. He writes:—

> Sale didn't come off; guess they must have paid up.
> W. A. Schwarz.

AMONG THE TRADE.

The local wholesale produce men have reversed their former decision as to doing business between 5 A. M. and 5 P. M. They will now close at 12 noon, opening at any time in the night they like.

The Gimbel grocery store has gone into the oleo business. They advertise pound prints at 25 cents.

During the week creditors filed a petition in the United States District Court to have the United States Starch and Glucose Co., of this city, adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. The petitioners and their claims are: E. A. Wright Bank Note Co., $300; Swain Brothers, $54.11; Oil and Waste Machine Saving Co., $52.96; Wellington Starch Co., $13,888.36; Thomas W. Barnes, $1,839.39; F. A. Masser, $123.72.

Munsey Chain Store Scheme Branching Out.

The Munsey Grocery Co. has leased a large store room in Youngstown, Ohio, at a rental of $5,500 per year for establishment of one of the branch stores of that company. The leading stockholder in this concern is Frank A. Munsey, the magazine publisher. Similar stores have been opened by this company in various cities of the country. The concern sells groceries at retail, makes no free deliveries, sells for cash and expresses an intention of selling goods at an advance of 15 per cent. over cost. It is not yet known whether the company will sell green fruits and vegetables, but as the plan suggested is in most respects similar to that of the "cash stores" which do not handle green goods it is supposed that this line will be omitted by the Munsey Co. also.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

A circular from a new Baltimore grocery comes into this department for criticism. It measures 9 x 12 inches, and here is the photographic reproduction:—

C. & P Phone, Gilmor 1547 Y. Orders called for and promptly delivered.

I do not like this circular. It is, in my judgment, susceptible of great improvement. Over half of the available space has been used by the boldface heading. This seems to me a clear waste of space. It is all very well to make much of the store being new, but I shouldn't have taken so much space to do it. I should have preferred letting actions speak louder than words. For instance, a heading like this could have been used:—

See what the New Tea and Coffee Store is Doing:

Keep the name and address for the bottom, where it rightly belongs, and follow the heading with just a line or two of introduction. Somewhere in the body of the circular or at the bottom a line could go "We Give Green Trading Stamps." The balance of the advertisement should be meat. As a matter of fact, all the real advertising of specific goods at a price which this circular contains is the ten lines headed "Cut Price." A new store ought to reach out for business, and by far the best way it can do it is by exploiting well-selected goods at attractive prices. Big black lines such as appear at the head of this circular will never get trade in the world. The advertising for the stamps may get some, but it is not by any means the best trade. One customer who comes for goods is better than ten who come for stamps or schemes. I should have used about four times as much space to advertise goods and prices as has been used in this circular.

Here Is a Good Scheme!

Grocers sometimes demonstrate these with fine results. The demonstration shows two things—first, the ease with which beef tea, bouillon or soup is made from these capsules, one of which has simply to be dropped in a cup of hot water; then it shows the delicious, spicy flavor.

You can sell hundreds of boxes, and every one at a profit.

The Hotel Patrons' Demand

A coffee that satisfies on a hotel table is a good coffee and will stand up under any test you can give it.

That's because hotel patrons are supercritical. They expect more than they get at home; in fact they expect perfection.

Hotel Astor Coffee is the year-in-and-year-out brand of some of the most exclusive hotels in New York City. They never think of buying anything else — they wouldn't dream of it.

The success of this coffee under this exacting test is really the reason that led us to push it through the grocery trade. We have a plan to increase your high-grade coffee trade. May we tell you about it? A postal request is enough.

Warm Roast for Extravagant Food Advertising

Advertising Writer Contends that the Advertiser of Proprietary Foods Defeats His Own Ends when He Makes Extravagant Claims. After all, Steak and Hot Cakes can Never be Eliminated.

A writer in "Printer's Ink," a weekly publication devoted to the advertising business, says some sharp things in the last issue about food advertisers who claim everything in sight. He reproduces an advertisement of this type, and comments upon it as follows:—

> The food man has no case in court when he takes this tack. All that anybody has to do to refute him is to ask the jury to look at the prisoner's face.
> You can't reason effectively against so capricious a thing as the human appetite, and this is what the food man is trying to do when he ransacks the dietary books and puts together a lot of "facts" tending to prove that his food is the one food of Man, and that oats and corn are only fit for horses. Who cares anything about the opinion of an agricultural college when, in its very presentation, he has to compare with such staple, savory, universally beloved delicacies as sirloin steak or eggs? No matter how many physiological common-places he may get together in support of the proposition that his patent food is the perfect food, you can drive him out of court by asking the jury if it wouldn't enjoy a plate of nice brown corn cakes with maple syrup.
> Really, the only consistent food advertisements are a grocery catalogue or a delicatessen window, which present all the things there are to eat in an impartial way. The very names of any of them in the driest bargain-sale list are tempting. The cheeses, smoked tongues, thin-sliced bacon and cross-sections of roly-poly imported sausages piled up in a delicatessen shop make the mouth water. Everything sold for the food of Man has its appeal, and Man wants a little of all of them at some time in the year. Therefore, this unfortunate practice of selecting one food—the only one you happen to make—and trying to prove by chapter and verse that it is the Complete Food, and all-sufficient, is dead against human nature. You can't fight appetite with reasoning, no matter how many eminent dietary authorities vouch for your facts. You might as well set out to teach people to feel with their heads and distrust their motives. When it becomes necessary to contrast your stuff with a sirloin steak, as an extreme instance of the Horrible Example, why, doesn't the argument become a farce on its own showing? It might go well enough in some neglected country where the people who read newspapers and magazines have never inserted a knife into a prime, juicy sirloin. But how about a country where readers have to pass the butcher shop on the way to the grocer's?
> When the food man is confined to a single delicacy in his advertising, there seem to be about three fundamental logical lines of argument open to him, two of which are right and the third altogether wrong.
> First of all, he can appeal direct to the human critter in Man—strike for the appetite. He can show how well his particular brand of flakes or crackers is prepared, how delicately browned, how neatly packed. He can emphasize savoriness in his commodity, cutting loose in a debauch of the overpowering words that make people's mouths water, even on paper. Why, there are whole sections of Roget's synonyms that make an irresistible food advertisement as they stand, with no argument at all:—
> "Pungent, piquant, poignant, spicy, full-flavored, zest, relish, smack, tang, gamy, toothsome, palatable, racy, seasoned, aroma, dainty, tit-bit, delicate, delicious, nectar, ambrosial, crisp, tempting, tasty, appetizing, exquisite, fragrant, delectable, sweetmeat, rich, salt, strong, gusto———."
> The food advertiser, though, has a singular failing. He ought to talk to readers as though they were well, and hearty, and hungry. Instead, he more often addresses them as though they were sick, and his near-food was prescribed to make them well, like Peruna. His arguments carry their own refutation in the text because he appeals to That Tired Feeling instead of to the human appetite. His ads remind one of those modern novels where the characters never have anything to eat because they are busy analyzing one another's morbid motives. Really, now, ought not a food advertisement to be more nearly like a Dickens story, in which the characters are perpetually having good things to eat and drink?
> Appetite is certainly the first great primary fact to be kept in mind in advertising food, because food is to eat, and people eat because they enjoy it.
> The second basic argument of food advertising appears to be Nourishment. These are days of fad and fuddle. Undoubtedly, a good many people wish to have the comfortable feeling that what they eat is doing them good—a whole lot of condensed good. It is therefore possible to talk so convincingly about the nutritive value of canned beans, macaroni, cheese and other binding foods that readers put them into their little tummies in complete confidence, and feel them do good all the way down, like a cocktail descending the throat of a giraffe. Readers do this, and never stop to ask themselves that other great question connected with food—namely, that having once taken it into your system, the next problem is to get it out again. That detail is left to the liver-pill advertiser—and this is probably as it should be.
> So Nourishment is the second basic argument, and a mighty effective one. But it is not nearly so potent as Appetite. And it is highly dangerous in the average copywriter's hands, because in his eagerness to make it strong he is almost certain sooner or later to extend it into the third basic argument on which food advertisers build—Comparative Nourishment. And this last is the one that is all wrong.
> When he goes into comparisons, the food man never knows where to stop. He ransacks the books for tite to negate the proof. Tobacco facts that will make a sirloin steak look devilishly black. He can get any sort of facts along this line that are needed to prove his point for the whole body of dietic knowledge is a vast scientific guess, and none of the authorities agree with one another, or even with themselves. But even if all the authorities agreed, and he could assure readers that Science discountenanced the sirloin steak, there would still be the human appe- does no good, even if it doesn't do harm. Yet the human palate likes tobacco. Wine is a mocker, and strong drink raging. But we consume in the neighborhood of 170,000,000 gallons of spirit a year. And so it is with sirloin steak. Even if it were harmful, people would want it. Even if this ad scared them into vegetarianism for a season there would naturally come a time when a diet of it would drive them back to sirloin steak.

Western Butter Men Organize Against Oleo.

The commission merchants and pure butter dealers of the city of St. Louis, Mo., have formed an organization for the purpose of assisting in the suppression of the illegal sale of oleomargarine in the city and to advance the interests of St. Louis as a butter market, and at the same time encourage the dairy industry in the State.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Sauterne Wines.

These are sweet, white wines, produced in the Bordeaux district, and particularly around the village of Sauterne, whence they derive their name.

Sauterne Barsac, vin de Grace, Chateau Sudurant, La Tour Blanche, and the noted Chateau d'Yquem, etc., which are from the "Blanches," or dry, white wine districts of France, are all considered Sauternes. They usually contain about 5 per cent. of alcohol.

As a rule, the white wines of the Bordeaux district are finer flavored and have a more delicate perfume than the red wines, and gradually lose their sweetness with age.

Safety Matches.

These were first invented about 1855 by a Swedish gentleman named Lundström, a Master of Arts, but also engaged in the world-renowned match factory of the Jönköping Co., at the town of Jönköping, in Sweden.

Safety matches may be defined as matches which will only strike on the boxes. The idea is a very simple but a very clever one. The inflammable ingredients are merely kept separate, one mixture being placed on the end of the match, while the other is spread on the sides of the boxes and called friction. The inflammable material into which the match is dipped ordinarily consists of the chlorate and bichromate of potassium, red lead and antimony sulphide; or, say, 40 parts of minium, 30 parts of antimony trisulphide and 6.7 parts of gum arabic. The friction or striking surface is generally prepared by mixing, say, 9 parts of amorphous phosphorus, 7 of iron pyrites, pulverized and sifted, 3 of pulverized glass, and one part of glue or gum, with the requisite quantity of water. It is therefore only on a surface smeared with the latter mixture that the former will ignite.

Sealing Wax.

A compound of shellac and resin, melted in turpentine, and colored with vermilion, ivory or lampblack, and various other colors as required.

A good sealing wax may be made from six parts of powdered resin, four of red lead, two of vermilion, and two parts of powdered shellac.

Increase Your Profits!

No. 592-9. 1908 Model

This is a new model and is the most complete register ever manufactured. It has nine separate adding counters and nine separate cash drawers. Nine registers in one.

Keeps record of each clerk's sales apart from a total of all the sales. Records number of customers each clerk has waited on, and also the total number of customers. Has counters for "Received on Account," "Charge," and "Paid Out." Prints itemized record under lock and issues check.

Each drawer is provided with a different-toned bell so that each clerk can tell if his drawer is opened by another. Drawers can be locked when clerks are at lunch or out of the store.

The new model is equipped with time printer to print the time of day to the minute when a sale is made. It can also be used for recording the time of arrival and departure of clerks. It also has an autographic attachment which is very valuable in making records of goods wanted or articles called for that are not carried in stock.

Let Us Show You How

You cannot afford to miss success by making mistakes.

Forget one charge sale—and you've lost the profit on ten cash sales.

Forget one payment on account—and you've lost a customer who would have come ten times again to buy.

One dishonest or careless clerk can offset your profit on the sale of ten others.

A National Cash Register Increases Accuracy

The difference between accurate handling of transactions in any store and inaccurate handling of money and credit, is the difference between success and failure.

You know that absolute accuracy in yourself and your clerks not only insures you that you get all the money taken over the counter, but it makes new trade for your store because your reputation for care and exactness is spread all over your city.

A National Cash Register Makes Money for You

620,000 storekeepers are using these registers because they save money and bring new customers.

Our new 1908 model lets you know each night exactly how your business stands. It does a lot of other things which we will be glad to explain to you. It will pay you to investigate our new registers.

Our Great Guarantee

We guarantee to furnish a better Register for less money than any other company in the world.

We make Registers suitable for all kinds of stores. Prices, $15.00 up—on easy monthly payments if desired.

Send us a postal and one of our salesmen will call when next in your vicinity and show you how simple, as well as how complete, our Registers are. He will also explain how you can increase your cash sales.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

NEW AD. DAILY.

Beginning Monday we will have a new ad. daily in "The Times." It will be a 10-inch double in the top right of the Women's page. We're going to make this a live corner. We're going to talk store news, in a racy natural way, and we're going to make this 20 inches of newspaper space sell goods.

But remember the ad. will fail to bring results unless you all catch the spirit of it. Be alive to all it says. Live and act and have your business being in what we write. That's what makes good advertising good. "Be up to snuff," as the Yankees say, when specials are advertised.

A NEW COFFEE SCHEME.

Monday we will put 500 1-pound bags Senate coffee in the south window. Into these we will place ten front row tickets for "The Chorus Lady," in which Rose Stahl appears as leading lady next week. We are not going to use this much in our ad. Just a quiet reference to it Saturday night, assuring those that receive them that the ticket is bona fide and redeemable or exchangeable like any ticket. The remarks of the recipients afterwards will be interesting. Report some of them at the office.

MALT EXTRACT.

So long as people think they need malt extract in the spring and have the money to pay for it we will sell it. So show up Prof. Kurtz brand at $1.50 per dozen.

Beef wine and iron will be in demand as usual when the warm days come to us. Show up a case of each size, 15 and 30 cents.

EASTER EATING.

Burk's hams and bacon will be on display early. Other brands, too. Likely we'll run a special at a cut price by the strip for Friday or Saturday. A three-hour cut-price sale of fresh eggs will take place Friday morning. At present 20 and 25 cents the dozen will be the figures. The 25 cents are selected. They're chiefly from the Anderson farm and are really worth the difference.

Take orders for grapefruit, fresh asparagus, Brussels sprouts and lots of nice glass goods.

Easter is growing in popularity. The Easter breakfast; the Easter luncheon; the Easter dinner all mean a better Easter business for the grocer.

THE WANT BOOK.

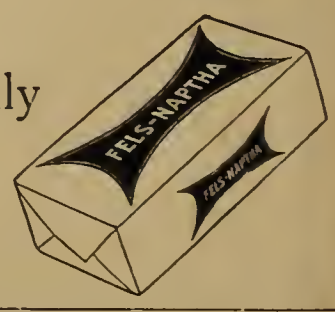
The want book is public property so to speak. Its use isn't confined to the stock man. Everything you have a call for put it down. We went into this matter before, but we are inclined to think that our instructions were not carried out. Not only everything that's called for that we don't carry, but every time it's called for—put it down. No matter if we don't put it in stock; no matter if it's scratched again and again—down with it. Then your part is done.

To Abolish Tobacco Trust Coupons.

Hearings were begun last week before the House Ways and Means Committee of Congress on a bill introduced by Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota, chairman of the Appropriation Committee, to impose an internal revenue tax on every prize coupon given away with tobacco, cigars, cigarettes or snuff sold in packages in the United States. The bill is aimed at the Tobacco Trust, and its purported design is to remove the gift coupon as a weapon to crush competition. John W. Yerkes, former Commissioner of Internal Revenue, appeared before the committee as attorney for the independent tobacco manufacturers and urged a favorable report on the bill.

One is EASY—the Other HARD

You can sell your own package coffee once—but it is hard to KEEP selling, because it is hard to have it always the same—and it isn't known. You don't have to try to sell "Ariosa," because we have created such an enormous demand for it everywhere by our extensive advertising. It is always the same; and those who buy it once ALWAYS buy it. You can get rid of ten times as much of it as you can of your own, which means that you make more money on it than you do on your own.



ARBUCKLE BROTHERS NEW YORK

When you say

"Fels-Naptha soap" to your jobber you contract for goods about the demand, sale and popularity of which there can be no question.

Because Fels-Naptha is the only laundry soap that does actually save women fuel, time and temper on wash-days—and other days.

There should be no question about what soap to stock heavily.

About Other Men's Customers.'

Remember some things I said awhile back about what a queer thing the law was, and how you could never depend on it to stand up for you when you needed it most?

Here's another illustration of it I heard last week.

A grocer in a small place in Hunterdon County, N. J., built up a good business in about five years. He had a lot of obstacles to overcome—rather more than usual, I think—but he won out, and was doing fine.

Just about as he had gotten on his feet, after a hen of a struggle, another grocer whose main store is in a town in the next county came to the place and opened a branch store.

I've known the branch store man for about three years, and knew of him before that. In his private life he's honest and clean, but in business he's pretty dirty. I don't mean he'll steal or pick pockets, but he has no sense of honor. He'll get what he wants or know the reason why.

From the very beginning he worked like Sam Hill to make the branch store go. It was right in the neighborhood where my friend's store was, and he brought a crack salesman from the main store to drum up orders.

If the salesman had got a list of my friend's customers, he couldn't have gone after 'em any more directly than he did. He was a good salesman, I'll say that for him, and he worked hard in a bad cause. My friend saw the work of five years melting away. He was darned near crazy.

He tried to hold his trade together, but the other fellow was slicker, and as the branch store man cut prices all to pieces, he made a lot of headway.

My friend went to a lawyer. He told him he thought he could get an injunction against the branch store grocer, and they went to court about it. The branch store man made a lot of it in his advertising, and by and by the case came up.

My friend lost. The judge said that inasmuch as the customers didn't belong to anybody, and had no contract to buy their groceries of my friend, they were fair game, and anybody could go after 'em. The branch store man set up a great howl of glee in his advertising, and worked harder than ever.

The grocer whose trade he stole is going along in a small way, trying to pick up the scattered ends. Ain't it a shame? It certainly would seem as if he ought to have some rights. There he worked for five years to induce people to trade with him, and just as he gets 'em good and hard the other fellow comes along and cuts the ground from under his feet!

I say it ain't right. The law ought to have stood by him in some way and you can't make me think anything else.

Hasn't a dealer any right at all to consider a customer his? You take an old-established store—in the same place for twenty years. The Jones family have bought every cents' worth of their groceries there for fifteen years. Can't that grocer claim the Joneses as a customer? When he sells his business can't he charge for their business among others? If he can, and I say he can, why can't he protect himself in some way against people who try to get that trade away from him?

I suppose the answer is, because the Joneses can any minute drop him and go somewhere else.

Still, that answer don't satisfy me.

I find that among most grocers there's a kind of honor about this business. More so in the country, where the grocers all know each other, than in the city, where very often they don't. A grocer of this class would no more go deliberately after a customer he knew was dealing with his competitor than he would kick him in the street. He believes in doing as he wants to be done by, and he wouldn't like the same slimy game played on himself.

It's only occasionally that you find a fellow mean enough to do it.

I'm talking now about retailers only. Without any attempt to knock, my experience is that jobbers are nowhere near as careful about this as the retailers are.

I was talking the other day with a fine old retail grocer in a town of about 5,000. We were going over this very case.

"Why, if I could double my business in a week!" he said, "I wouldn't send a salesman after my rival's customers! I don't call it a square deal at all. I'll advertise for the general public, and whoever sees the advertisement can come to my store and buy if they want to. But I won't go there or send a man there and try to persuade the trade away.

"Every day I get people who have been dealing with other stores," he went on. "And every day I suppose they get people who have been dealing here. They get dissatisfied and think they'll make a change. I'll take all that kind of trade I can get. But some of my competitors don't think I'm even entitled to that. I remember about six months' ago a big boarding house keeper came in here and opened an account. She bought about $30 worth a week, and I knew that she had dealt for a long time with Smith, down here about three squares. She didn't tell me why she was leaving Smith and I didn't ask her. I opened her account and was glad to get it. A day or two afterward Smith came down here and gave me an awful roast for taking his trade. 'Why, man,' I said, 'I didn't take your trade! What d'ye want me to do? Refuse to sell the woman goods? I never lifted a finger to get her trade.'

"He didn't have the nerve to say so, but I'll bet a dollar he thought I ought to have tried to straighten out the squabble between himself and the woman, whatever it was, so he could get her back. No, sir, I'll take all that kind of trade that comes my way, and be glad to get it."

Of course he's right. And as I say, it's only a pretty mean fellow who will make a deliberate attempt to coax a competitor's trade away. When somebody mean enough to do that tries it on, I think there ought to be some protection.

Since the law won't help, how about handing him a beautiful punch in the neck?

No Preserved Catsup can be Sold in North Dakota.

Prof. E. F. Ladd, Food Commissioner of North Dakota, has issued the following bulletin, in which he explicitly states that catsup containing benzoate of soda will not be permitted to be sold in that State. The bulletin reads:—

> Of late there have been several inquiries with regard to the use of benzoate of soda in catsups for the pack of 1908.
> The law in North Dakota explicitly says with regard to the use of benzoate of soda that this product is to be used only in bulk goods, and further:—
> "This clause shall not be applicable to any case at any time where products can be commercially produced without the use of chemical preservatives."
> It has been shown that catsups can be produced without the use of benzoate of soda and are being produced, and that the cost therefor is from 12 to 20 cents per dozen more than where the preservative is used. This being true no discretion is left to the department, but the law, as it stands, must be enforced and the resolutions as passed at the conference at St. Paul will be enforced, viz.:—
> "Resolved, That catsups conforming to the standards laid down in United States Circular No. 19, including freedom from artificial coloring matter and fillers, may be lawfully sold. After December 1, 1908, the sale of catsups containing preservatives except those mentioned in the standard, will be contested."
> Merchants, jobbers and wholesalers, as well as packers doing business in North Dakota, will please govern themselves accordingly.

Western Packers Will Sell No Futures Before June

Association of Western Canned Goods Packers so Decides at Last Week's Meeting. Don't Want to Gamble so Far Ahead and Afraid of the Spot Market.

The Association of Western Packers of Canned Goods has taken a significant and decisive stand during the week as to the question of selling future corn and tomatoes. At a meeting held during the week a resolution was adopted "that the best interests of the packing and jobbing trade will be conserved at this time through curtailment by jobbers and the postponement of purchase and sale by packers of future corn and tomatoes until June 1, 1908. None of the members of the Western Association therefore, and they include some of the largest packers in the country, will if they obey this resolution, offer any futures in the two lines named before June.

It seems to be the consensus of opinion that the Western packers had two reasons for their decidedly unusual action: First, to get a closer sight of crop conditions before they commit themselves by the sale of future canned goods; second, that it would be unwise to do much with futures while the spot market was in its present condition.

Another California Raisin Combine.

The California raisin growers, after a rather disastrous season, will try another combine. About 150 raisin growers of the Fresno section assembled in mass meeting in that city on March 31st, and decided unanimously to pool their raisins according to the terms of the Turner proposition, or to have a committee of ten, who were to investigate the matter, making terms and prices with packers and report their action to the growers for approval and acceptance. The amount of goods reported pooled was 5,013 tons, or a little over one-half of the estimated holdings by growers in that district. The entire hold-over in that and other districts is conservatively estimated at 13,000 tons. Every raisin combine heretofore attempted has come to grief.

THE MODEL CASH GROCERY STORE.

GENTLEMEN:—In reply to your inquiry of recent date, we enclose a few sample slices of sandwich dried beef, sliced in the highest style of the art, sliced on Johnson's patented "EVERSHARP." These slices, thin as paper, smooth as glass, soft, moist and delicious, were cut the full size of a six-pound knuckle. The whole knuckle was sliced to perfection in six minutes.

I also enclose, in separate wrapper, some very small, very thin slices cut from the meat that covers the knuckle bone. Please notice that the little nub end of gristle and skin remaining unsliced weighs less than a quarter ounce, every particle of edible meat sliced up in thin, bright, salable slices. Of course we never sell any one a quarter pound of these little slices; but every half or quarter pound we weigh up gets alike its equal share of little and broad slices.

Please note the saving in time—as much work done in six minutes as the best circular-knife machines can do in twenty minutes, and then the quality of our work—slices thinner, smoother and more perfect than any other machine can possibly produce. So moist, so soft, so juicy, so broad, so transparently thin they cause enthusiastic comment wherever introduced, resulting in a large increase of very profitable trade.

We sell our machines for forty-six dollars on small monthly instalments, and every machine can be depended on to more than earn its own cost. If you prefer to pay cash we allow you a liberal discount. Hoping to receive your order.

Respectfully yours, A. W. JOHNSON.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Scrubbing Day Window Display.

The window should be thoroughly cleaned inside and out in order to carry out the cleaning idea.

The background can be made up with a light buggy wheel or bicycle wheel. Wrap all the spokes with white cloth and to this attach the brooms. If you desire you can run strips of red, white and blue cloth between the spokes. Around the rim of the wheel attach scrubbing brushes and in the centre form a circle of whisk brooms. With the aid of an electric or water motor this wheel can be made to revolve, thereby adding greatly to the effect. People are attracted by moving objects in the show window.

For the floor display, build a sloping platform from the window glass to the background; cover this over with white cheesecloth and then fill in with those articles properly labeled and priced, which may be used in scouring, cleaning, scrubbing, etc.

As a suggestion I mention the following: Soaps of all kinds, brushes, mops, mop dryers, window washers and rubbers, ammonia, Pearline, Gold Dust, sal soda, Bon Ami, Sapolio and lye. Other articles may appear to you in construction.

If you have a dummy figure of a woman, make it up as a scrubbing woman (calico wrapper, bonnet, etc.) at work on the floor or standing erect at the table polishing pans.

Place a show card about 10 x 12 inches in centre front of window bearing the words:—

"Things You Need for Cleaning Day."

It is suggested that this window display be in for Saturday's trade, as people will probably prepare then for the week.

A Soft Drink Window.

This is an easy window to fix, but it looks nice when finished. Have your window clean and dry.

Mix a little chrome yellow and whiting and paint a head to represent the sun's face in the upper right-hand corner; also paint his rays projecting from him over the glass.

Cover the floor with crepe paper and arrange some of your soft drinks on it. In the centre lay a napkin, with a bottle of drinks and a tumbler.

To one side put a sign as follows:—

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

Worcester, Mass.

At the last meeting of the Worcester (Mass.) Retail Grocers and Provision Dealers' Association recently, it was unanimously voted to send letters to all the wholesale dealers in Worcester requesting them not to sell any more goods at retail. The action came after a long discussion, in which the wholesalers were put on the rack for taking away much of the retailers' trade.

St. Louis, Mo.

At the last meeting of the St. Louis (Mo.) Retail Grocers' Association letters were read from the Great Western Cereal Co. and the American Cereal Co. apropos of the desire of the St. Louis grocers to establish 12 cents as a retail price for standard package rolled oats. The letters were as follows:—

J. D. Lukenbill, Secretary St. Louis Retail Grocers' Association.

Dear Sir:—We have your valued favor under date of the 16th and will say that we will be very glad indeed to co-operate with your Association in any way that you deem advisable in an effort to fix the minimum selling price to the consumer of 12 cents per package on our Mother's brand thirty-sixes.

In stating this, we are only reiterating the fact that when certain other cereal manufacturers advanced the price of their goods to the jobber, who in turn was compelled to advance the price to the retailer, and continued to advertise their package as a 10-cent seller, seemingly not taking into consideration the fact that the retail grocer was the only one who was not getting his profit out of the package, we steadily advised the retailers to adopt the minimum 12-cent price and went so far as to have store cards printed which we placed in each case of Mother's Oats.

The store card stated that Mother's Oats should not be sold for less than 12 cents. In doing this, we wanted to help the retailer show the purchaser that the price of Mother's Oats was 12 cents per package and to prove our statement, we would add that in the past seven months over eighteen million packages of Mother's Oats have been consumed in the United States, and almost every package has gone to the consumer at the 12-cent price (and this in view of the fact that other brands were being extensively advertised to the consumer at 10 cents per package), which would mean an increased profit approximately of $360,000 to the retailers.

It would be very hard for this company to go alone in a movement of this kind, and we would suggest, to get the fullest benefits, that you insist on the other cereal companies, packing rolled oats, to take the same position which we are taking and have taken for the past eight months, which has been to insist that the retailer should be allowed to make a living profit out of the goods which he handles. With best wishes for the success of your movement, we remain,

Yours very truly,
The Great Western Cereal Co.

Mr. J. D. Lukenbill, Secretary St. Louis Retail Grocers' Association.

Dear Sir:—We acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 16th inst., asking us in behalf of your organization to consider the advisability of establishing a minimum selling price on Quaker Oats of 12 cents per package.

When we were obliged by the increased cost of raw materials to advance the price of Quaker Oats to a point where the retail grocer was justified in asking 12 cents per package we did everything we reasonably could to influence the retail trade to establish this new and higher priced basis. Our salesmen were all instructed to endeavor by reasonable argument to induce any retailer whom they found selling Quaker Oats at less than 12 cents to advance his selling price. We packed in each case for a long time and are still, a window hanger announcing an advance in the price of Quaker Oats, and giving the reasons therefor, with the expectation that the retail grocer would place this conspicuously in his store, which most of them did. We have been glad to do this. It is our desire to make Quaker Oats profitable to the trade. Our work has been exactly in accordance with the wishes of your Association as expressed in your letter, and we will gladly continue in this respect to work with you.

Yours truly,
The Quaker Oats Company.

As to Coloring Tea.

Greenville, Pa., April 4, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—That I may become more familiar with the business of handling groceries, and have a better knowledge of teas, I beg to inquire whether I have been correctly informed as to the manner in which teas are colored. Several years ago a gentleman who was at that time engaged in the tea business told me how teas were colored as follows: The Oolongs, Assams and all the black teas are colored by taking an iron plate as large as an ordinary rug or drugget (8 x 10 feet), covering it with a solution of arsenic and spreading the tea upon it and applying heat on the bottom of the plate, which transfers the iron rust color into the tea. That's why it is that when you pour scalding water on the tea it gives off a rich rust color and is ready for drinking at once. That's why it is that when you upset a cup of that tea upon the table cloth you can scarcely wash it out, for iron is the active principle in coloring calicos and other material and it sets right into the goods.

The green teas are colored by taking a copper plate of the above-named size, covering it with a solution of arsenic and applying heat to the bottom of the plate, thus transferring the copper color into the tea. It is said there is enough poison in a pound of any of the colored teas to poison a whole family if taken at one time. Is the above information correct? If not, how are they colored? Kindly let me hear from you soon.

Yours truly,
F. J. HUNTSMAN.

To the best of the "Grocery World's" knowledge and belief, the above correspondent is wholly wrong. Whether such practices existed years ago or not, it is absolutely certain that they do not today, for tea so colored could not be sold in this country either under the pure tea law or the pure food law.

It is true that some of the green teas which come to this country are slightly colored, artificially, but not in any such way or to any such degree as described above. Black teas are not colored at all.

The Dried Fruit Slump.

————, Pa., April 9, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I noticed your article in the "Grocery World" of April 6th, page 15, commenting on dried fruit futures of last fall. The expected has happened. I tried to save and I did save some of our "Grocery World" subscribers from over-stocking. What surprised me was that they bit so hard at the high prices. The jobber doesn't lose so much, he unloaded on the retailer. In traveling with a local jobber through the country I just pitied some of the grocers and called the jobber to time for overloading the retailer with goods that he should almost know he would lose money on. Thereby hangs the old story—if I don't somebody else will.

Yours truly,
G.

Dried Fruit Case Not to be Decided on Technicality.

Harrisburg, Pa., April 7, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I notice in the issue of the "Grocery World" of April 6th the case, which was argued before Judge Bell, of Blair County, where a case stated was agreed upon, and note also your comment with reference to the technical question of the appeal. I desire to say, with reference to this, that both attorneys asked the court not to decide this case on this question, but to kindly decide all the questions raised, and he practically intimated from the Bench that he would do so. I do not think there is any danger of this case being disposed of except by all the questions raised being disposed of by the court.

Yours truly,
JAMES FOUST,
Dairy and Food Commissioner

Jar Prices Now Very Soon.

Expected Within the Next Month. Will Probably be Above Last Year. Advances Likely if Fruit Crop Large.

Contrary to the practice of many years past, none of the large jar manufacturers have up to the present time named prices on Mason jars for the season of 1908. As explained several weeks ago, the reason for this was the enormous stocks of unsold jars which the small fruit crop of last season left on dealers' hands all over the country.

There is no announcement as to when prices will be forthcoming, but it probably will not be until the size of the fruit crop can be foretold to some extent. That may mean some time within the next thirty days. What the prices will be is also in the dark, but it is expected that they will open around $4.25 to $4.50 for quarts. This is somewhat higher than last year.

The packers claim that they have not made enough money in the last few years, and it is therefore almost certain that if the fruit crop is good prices will sharply advance after the opening. At the present writing, everything points to at least a fair fruit crop this season.

Every Pound in a Prize Contest

¶ Every pound of Gurnse butter is prepared as carefully as if we intended to offer it in a prize contest.

¶ It simply could not be any better; neither can any butter be better.

¶ Produced by our own dairies, from milk that we personally oversee and know all about, packed under our very eye and inspected not only by our own inspectors, but by the inspector of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange—Gurnse butter is the very thing you need to make butter trade and hold it when you get it.

Packed in 30 and 50-pound boxes—pound and half pounds—36 cents.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XXXV.—As to Large Buying.

An ounce of preventative is worth a pound of cure.

When applied to the mercantile business this means good judgment in buying. A buyer may be able to get a better price by buying in round lots, but will he make more by it? Will he load his house up with more of one kind of goods than he can sell at a profit and be compelled to cut into the profits in order to close them out? Here is the place for judgment. If he can handle the round lot he should buy that way and increase his profits that much. If he is doubtful of his ability to do this, he had better use his ounce of preventative and buy lighter.

Buying goods close and at the same time not buying too much is hard work. It is much easier to over-buy, and that is the reason some stores always have a lot of old goods on hand all the time. It is also the reason that some others are compelled to cut deep into profits to keep their goods from getting old on the shelves, and the reason that still others are forced to quit business.

One ounce of preventative every buyer can take before placing each order is to absolutely cease to care what may be the thoughts of the man with whom he is placing the order. Sellers of goods always want to sell all they can to good customers but they also admire the man who can buy strictly for his trade and resist all their efforts to load him up.

F. A. P.

For coffee and tea. George Liss & Co., New York, N. Y. The word "Highwood."

Tea's Promise.

Richard Wayne Wilson, the veteran writer on trade and industrial matters, who prepared the series of authoritative articles on tea, which, appearing originally in the columns of the "New York Tribune," during the Spring and Summer of 1906, have been so extensively quoted from and copied by both daily newspaper, and by trade journals throughout the country, and which have, also, served as the basis of much of the tea literature disseminated by great handlers of the Oriental leaf, is an enthusiast on the subject. He believes tea will eventually be accorded here the rank it holds, as a beverage, in the United Kingdom, and that that happy consummation will be reached when the trade has thoroughly learned the necessity for properly stocking tea, and for teaching customers the right methods for its use.

He points to the inroads that Ceylon tea has everywhere made upon the trade of its rivals, as one evidence that his belief is well founded, saying, "The Ceylon planters are practically the sole tea producing interests that has systematically and intelligently undertaken to promote the use of its product. For years they have maintained what might be termed a 'bureau of information' for this country and Canada; and it is from this that the sellers of tea have learned the necessity for blending it, and for so expertly blending it as to secure a cup quality that will exactly suit the climate, the water, and the palates of the people of a given locality—for example, that a blend that will be adapted to the alkali plains will by no means answer for the alluvial lands; and it is from this, too, that tea drinkers have learned that no tea is fit to drink that is ignorantly brewed."

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

EVERY ONE A GOOD CHANCE.

No. 313.—In heart of Philadelphia's most aristocratic residential district. Store 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, half cash, balance monthly. The people who buy at this store are the promptest payers in the city. Stock $2,000-$3,000, net profits 20 per cent., owing to the fact that customers are mostly wealthy. Owner going to the country and will sell at inventory. This store is a little old-fashioned in some respects, but is thoroughly prosperous and can be very greatly increased.

No. 314.—In Ocean County, N. J. Summer resort, but good winter population also. General store, 40 x 75 feet. Doing $30,000 yearly, half cash, balance strict 30 days. Present stock $5,000, but can be reduced to $2,500 without impairing business. Uses two teams. Net clear 10 per cent. Balance of building divided into flat and offices, profitably rented. Owner retiring from business and will sell at inventory.

No. 324.—In North Philadelphia, store 16x42 feet. Does $300 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock $750. Uses one team. Clear net profits 12 per cent. Good house connected, for sale or rent. Owner retiring from business. Price inventory.

No. 326.—In West Philadelphia, store 17x32 feet. Does $350 to $450 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Stock $400 to $500. One team. Good house connected. Net profits 15 per cent. Owner retiring from grocery business, and will sell at inventory. This store has been established 20 years, and is solidly prosperous.

No. 329.—In Germantown, Philadelphia. Does $300 weekly, all cash. Stock about $1,000. No team. Nets clear 10 per cent. This business sells only groceries. The meat department is rented to another dealer on profitable terms, which make advertiser's rent very low. Owner has other business which takes his time. Price inventory.

No. 333.—General store in Mifflin County, Pa. An extremely strong proposition. Size 30x100 feet. Business about $4,000 per month, 40 per cent. cash. Stock $6,000, which can be reduced considerably. Uses two teams. Business thoroughly profitable, netting about $5,000 per year. Owner in poor health and wants to retire to country place. Will make very favorable terms. Low price for fixtures. Stock at inventory, with proper allowance for everything not strictly up to the mark. The business can be very decidedly increased.

No. 334—In West Philadelphia, size 16x44. Does $375 weekly, three-fourths cash. Stock $1500 but can be reduced to $1000. Clear slightly more than 10 per cent. above everything. Dwelling connected for sale or rent. Owner going into manufacturing and will sell at inventory. Fullest investigation.

No. 336.—On best business street of West Philadelphia. Store 16x27 feet. Does $150 to $200 weekly, all cash. Stock about $700. No team delivery. Clears 20 per cent. as expenses are low. Good dwelling connected for sale or rent. Good reasons which will be fully explained. Price inventory.

No. 340.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size 24x60 feet. Does $45,000 yearly. Three-fourths cash. Stock carried, $2,500. Uses two teams. Actual net profit, 12 per cent. Reason for selling, ill-health. Established 21 years. Price inventory. Fixtures will run about $1,500. Amount required, around $3,800. No dwelling.

No. 341.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and delicatessen. Size 20x30 feet. Does $300 weekly. All cash. Stock $2,000, but can be reduced to $1,300. Push cart delivery. Net profits, 15 per cent., as family run store. Established 12 years. Owner must sell as death compels him to assume another business. Price inventory. Fixtures will run about $1,500, but can be reduced to $1,100. Amount required, around $3,000. Cash or good security. Dwelling.

No. 345.—In West Philadelphia. Meats and provisions. Size 15x28 feet. Does about $11,000, three-fourths cash. Mostly sells meats, so stock only averages $250 No team. Actual net profits, 20 per cent. Owner wishes to change business, for reasons which will be explained. Price inventory. Take around $800. Dwelling.

No. 346.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats, provisions. Size, 16 x 30. Does $200 to $250 weekly, three-quarters cash, balance weekly. Stock about $500. Push cart delivery. Net profits 12 per cent. Low rent and expenses. Satisfactory reasons for selling. Price inventory. For stock and fixtures about $1,200 required. This is an extremely strong small proposition.

No. 347.—In high class part of West Philadelphia. Meats, provisions, canned goods, etc. Size, 22x60. Does $500 weekly, all cash. Stock $300 to $350. One team. Clear net profits 15 per cent. Rent, $30 monthly. Pay roll, $21 weekly. No real estate. Owner wants to get in other business and will sell at inventory. Cost about about $1,000, without team.

No. 351.—In southern Philadelphia. Tea, coffee and groceries. Size, 17 x 40 feet. Does $16,000 yearly, all cash. Splendid transient trade—3,000 people pass the store every two days. Stock only about $100 Net profits, 12½ per cent. Owner has trouble with help and wants to retire. Fine place for man and wife. Price asked, complete, about $700, including fine National cash register.

No. 353.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and provisions. Size, 16 x 30 feet. Does $14,000 yearly, two-thirds cash. Dwelling connected. Stock, $1,000 to $1,500. No team. Net profits, 10 per cent. Owner wants to go further into suburbs and will sell at inventory or lump sum of $1,500. Splendid chance for adding meats.

No. 356.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 36 feet. Does $400 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Dwelling connected, if wanted. Stock about $800. Uses one team. Nets clear 10 per cent. Owner needs a rest and his eyesight is failing. Will sell at inventory. Will take about $1,000.

No. 360.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 17 x 30 feet. Does $400 to $500 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock, $600. Owner takes out $40 weekly, beside living expenses. Uses one team. Good dwelling attached. Owner is going into the saloon business and will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,000. This is a splendid money-making proposition.

No. 362.—In Tioga, Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 20 x 30 feet. Does $425 weekly, half cash. Stock, $1,000. Clean net profits, 15 per cent. Dwelling connected for sale or rent. Owner has Government position and cannot give attention. Will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,500. Full investigation.

In all of these the cause of selling is good, and the fullest investigation courted. Every one paying.

This Will Sell Goods

No more useful fixture has ever been invented. Holds five jars where they can be seen and help sales.

Either oak or cherry, 3-coat finish. No old-fashioned hinges—swings on a bale to the right. Takes no more room than the 4-jar fixture. Nickel-plated trimmings.

This is an ornament, an economizer of room, and a silent salesman that knows its business.

These Goods Are Already Sold

Egg-O-See and E-C Corn have been more widely, more systematically and more continuously advertised to your customers than any flaked foods on the market. Everybody knows what they are. It requires no effort to sell them. Simply keep up your stock so you can fill your customers' orders, then they won't go somewhere else to get these popular products.

Egg-O-See Cereal Company
QUINCY CHICAGO BUFFALO

This Is The Famous Steel Cap

The one that doesn't get a poisonous corrosion on it when it seals jars of fruit. Your customers will never use a zinc cap again if you tell them about this. Try it.

A splendid profit for you. They are getting them at the china stores now. Get this money.

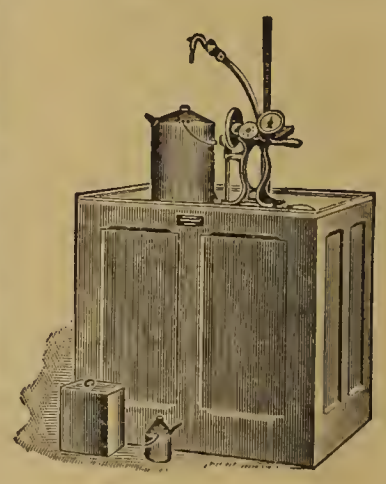
How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.



Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

Packed in ½-lb. jars, 6 and 12-lb. boxes

CROFT & ALLEN CO. Philadelphia PENNSYLVANIA

It's the Cleanest Store in Town

The grocer whose customers say this of his place has accomplished something which will cause those who deal with him to forgive much. They will even pay him higher prices without grumbling just because the cleanliness of his place leads them to believe his goods are worth paying more for.

The grocer's dirtiest job is filling orders for oil and gasoline. He can't turn a faucet on or off, fill a measure and empty it into a receptacle without taking the odor to his counter. With our up-to-date tanks he touches nothing but a clean lever, the receptacle is filled automatically. A clean, sanitary, safe and economical way to handle a dirty job. Our booklet on this subject is an education in itself, would you like to read it?

One Way to Use Our Advertising

Here's a good idea for a window display:—

Get any of the leading monthly magazines and turn to our advertisement—you'll find it in most of them. Cut out the page, surround the advertisement with a heavy black marking pencil line and paste it on the front of your window. Put below it a placard, "You Can Get These Goods Here." Then put some Ralston Health Food and Purina Whole Wheat Flour in the window, and see how many orders you get.

These products represent the very highest grade of their class. Pure, nutritious, delicious foods! More, we bring business in them to your door by our country-wide advertising.

No Rival for Winorr

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

"I wouldn't handle it; I'm selling enough brands of canned corn now?"

Do you say that to our Winorr proposition? If you do, you can hardly know about Winorr, because in the ordinary sense it is not canned corn at all. It is a corn specialty—corn packed without the hulls. You have nothing like it now, and for that reason it competes with nothing and has no competition.

True, it may cut in somewhat to your sales of other brands, but what of it, if it makes you as much profit and gives the customer better satisfaction?

We also pack a full line of finest quality Berries and Vegetables, moist and condensed Mince Meat, Catsup and Salad Dressing.

We are the largest canners of Sauer Kraut in the United States.

SEND THEM ANYWHERE

Do you want a brand of flavoring extracts you can send anywhere with the certainty that no matter how fastidious and exacting the cook or the housewife, she will be pleased?

Try our Waldorf brand of Lemon and Vanilla. If you don't say, when you smell and taste a sample, that you have never seen an extract to quite approach them in strength and smoothness, then we shall be greatly disappointed.

Price, $1.25 per dozen.

PREPARED ONLY BY

HETFIELD EXTRACT AND MFG. COMPANY

370 Greenwich Street, NEW YORK

Do You Buy Pasteboard or Apples

when you buy cartons?

Our new package, hermetically sealed, sanitary packed gives full weight, stops shrinkage, prevents accumulation of dirt, retains flavor and richness of apple. No depreciation in

QUALITY OR QUANTITY

Let us send you trial order, regular market prices.

We also pack 25 and 50 lb. boxes.

PRIME, CHOICE, FANCY

E.V. Peirson & Co., Newark, Wayne Co., N.Y.

You Can Use Kerosene Gas or Gasoline

The Acme Peanut Roaster is equipped to use either of the three and give the same results—i. e., perfectly roasted peanuts in the smallest amount of time, with the least expense and no labor.

The Acme Peanut Roaster is the cheapest and yet the most effective automatic roaster on the market. By its use you can earn at least from one to three dollars per day more than you now are making, and have an added attraction in your store. Full particulars and price on application.

ATSATT BROS.

How to Answer the Salesman

When the jobbers' salesman comes to you this season to get your future canned goods order, ask him about this 100 per cent. delivery.

He will probably tell you that his employer can't give you more than he gets himself, and that on the brands he is offering he has only a pro rata delivery.

Remind him that on Blue Bell and Clover Farm Canned goods—none better in Maryland—both the jobber and you can get a 100 per cent. delivery.

An All-year Round Drink

Clicquot Club Ginger Ale has been widely advertised all over the country. It is the one ginger ale made here which most people would rather have than the imported.

Don't wait until summer to lay in a stock. It sells in winter as well as summer, and if your customers see a supply of it tastefully arranged in your store they won't go to their druggists to get it. You might just as well have the profit, don't you think?

"I Wish I Had Some Real Gelatine"

Every day some woman in your town bemoans the disappearance of old-style gelatine--the clean, delicious, melting kind, flavored with lemon, that we learned to like on our mother's table.

Old-style gelatine has not disappeared, though at times it has seemed to be snowed under by the flavorless imitations that hide their worthlessness behind bright colors.

Chalmers' Gelatine is old-fashioned gelatine—nothing in it but purest calves' stock and spring water. Your customers want it.

James Chalmers' Sons

It Is Spelled R-A-M-L-Y

If you want to sell a really delightful smoke, get the real Ramly, don't take something gotten up to look like the Ramly, because there the similarity ends.

No cigarette ever made has jumped into such immediate popularity. It has become famous on its quality alone.

If you put Ramly Cigarettes in stock you will be assured of the permanent patronage of every man to whom you sell a package.

Don't get confused on the name—it is spelled R-A-M-L-Y.

With New Total Registering Device

The saving of time will doubly pay for it.

The convenience alone will make it worth all it costs.

It is cleaner, as it dispenses with the use of measures and the consequent absence of flies and dirt.

SELF-PRIMING and MEASURING PUMP

Accurately measures molasses, heavy oils, tar and other thick liquids. Has total registering device showing when stock is low in barrel.

No. 97 Pump costs $6.00; Auger, 75 cents; Extension Tube 50 cents a foot.

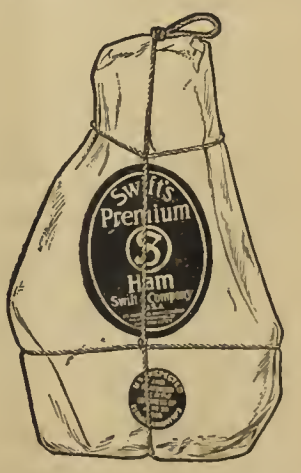
They Must Keep Expert

It is a provable fact that a majority of cooking experts use Nicelle Olive Oil in all their demonstrations.

Why? Because they must use the very best oil obtainable in order to insure results. Otherwise they would soon cease to be known as experts.



Nicelle Olive Oil is bottled in France, where produced. It is the first pressing of the finest oil olive grown. You will be proud to sell it.

"As Good As I Bought Last Time"

You ought to sell Swift's PREMIUM Hams for your own protection. Can you satisfy your trade unless your hams are uniform? And can they be uniform unless bought from a packer who can keep his raw material uniform?

Few packers have our facilities for keeping hams up to a given standard year after year. Swift's PREMIUM Hams scarcely vary a hair's breadth from one year's end to another. That does us a whole lot of good, as it will do you.

The woman who can always depend on getting good ham—"as good as I bought last time"—is going to buy lots of ham.

"Beats the Bugs"

Our bin keeps roaches, etc., out of loose goods—and customers like THAT. It shows off your goods and helps sell them, and you will like THAT. Send for our catalogue of stores we have fitted up, and let us give YOU an estimate.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

Write for our catalogue.

LOWNEY'S COCOA has maintained its high quality unimpaired regardless of the rise in the price of cocoa beans. For years now it has appealed to the best trade on its merits and become A STAPLE ARTICLE with a sure demand, constant and growing. Wide advertising in street cars, newspapers and magazines will go on pushing, pushing, pushing. It is a safe investment, and PAYS A FAIR PROFIT.

LOWNEY'S PREMIUM CHOCOLATE for cooking is of the same superfine quality.

CHEERINESS FOR SALE!

With a few electric lights properly disposed, here and there, we can give you a new store.

A store that will not only look new to you, but new to your customers and the passers-by.

A store that will be twice as cheery to work in, to buy in, and to come into from the street.

You wouldn't buy in a gloomy store yourself, if you could avoid it. Can you expect other people to like it any better?

See us about it.

Hams and Bacon Are in Demand

Are you giving your trade the best values for their money? You can easily do so by giving the people what they want and that is which are plump, have short shanks and round butts, are sweet, being sugar cured; mild, because they are not old; and of fine flavor, being smoked a nice, bright color, which is only possible by using hickory wood.

They are sold by the leading retail grocers in Philadelphia, having the most select and exacting trade.

Burk's "Butternut Bacon"

is the only substitute for "Crown Brand" Hams. It is selected from corn-fed hogs, specially cured with granulated sugar—mild and of exquisite flavor and taste.

It is put up in narrow strips, strung with white cord, cut absolutely square, making any waste impossible; wrapped in highly glazed and parchment paper and embellished on two sides with an attractive blue and white label.

A red seal is attached to the cord, stating the specific merits of this bacon, which is also known to the trade as the "5-B" Bacon, because of its name.

Pure Lard

to be at its best must contain all the original natural oils. Many brands of lard are "pure," but lack richness because these oils have been extracted to increase the manufacturer's profits.

BURK'S LARD

is strictly pure and contains all the properties of the wholesome hog fat and nothing else.

Let the Open Can Speak

"GET SOME"

When we get where we're driving for, pork and tomato-sauced beans will be about the largest-selling canned specialty packed.

And VAN CAMP'S will still be what it is to-day—by far the largest-selling brand. We originated pork and beans with tomato sauce, and we have always sold more than any other packer because VAN CAMP'S has always been better than any other packer's.

If you think that's just the usual manufacturer's guff, open a can side by side with any other brand you like. Your eye and your palate will speak for us instantly.

Such extensive advertising as we're doing to your customers would sell anything. Most of all a superfine article like VAN CAMP'S PORK AND BEANS.

Van Camp Packing Co.

Indianapolis, Indiana

The firms advertising on this page are all well known; their products are the best on the market and all bring you UNIVERSAL COUPONS

A BAG FULL OF GOODNESS

We don't have to say a word about the quality of Private Estate Coffee to the many thousands of retailers who are selling it—their customers do the talking for it. But those who haven't made Private Estate their Coffee Leader have missed a chance to wean their customers away from the Tea and Coffee Stores. It can't be beaten. We share our profit with grocers by giving them Universal Coupons with each case.

Giving It To You

We want you to handle our Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels.

Why should you? Partly because we assure you on our honor they're as good as Freihofer's Bread. We must make a superior grade of these things to sell them, and we are making it.

Another reason why you should think favorably of these goods is that every case contains Universal Coupons, which you can exchange for things you want.

We're spending our advertising money with you instead of your customer.

Better Than Milk or Meat

¶ Royal Peanut Butter is one of the most healthful food products ever manufactured. We want you to tell this to your customers, and as a real incentive for you to do so we are going to give you the money we would otherwise use to tell consumers of its merit. Universal Coupons packed in every case from January 1, 1908. Remember, it is the best thing of its kind ever made. You make a splendid profit on it and the coupons are exchangeable for any article of merchandise you may need for your home or store.

Nothing Like It Has Ever Been Made

This picture represents a floor wax which when properly applied makes wood like new. Grocers can build up a big trade on it because their customers need it—they are buying something of the kind now, and are going to paint stores to get it. If you will put a case of MOORE'S WAX where it can be seen and tell your trade what it will do you will get some money that is going somewhere else now. We are making it worth your while to do a little talking for this product by giving you a generous quantity of Universal Coupons with each case. You can buy anything you need with these coupons.

Only One In Fifteen's A "Star"

By no means are all the hams we produce good enough to be branded Star.

We turn out 40,000 hams a day. There isn't a bad ham in the lot—rigid selection of hogs assures that; but only one out of about fifteen is fine and tender enough to bear the Star brand. The rest are good hams; but they are not Star hams.

The Star ham is from a young, but mature, corn-fed hog—not too fat. The meat is solid, sweet, tender and juicy—the ham to burn into the memory the name of the grocer who sold it.

The Clever Move of Montgomery & Co.

Ringleader in the Local Jobbers' Conflict Protests Because a Member of the Wholesale Grocers' Association Resold Some Goods to the Retail Grocers' Association. Apparently Not Even Willing for Jobbers to Sell the Retailers' Organization. Manufacturer Involved, Who has Hitherto Sold Only Jobbers, Now Disgustedly Decides to Sell Retail Association Direct.

Evidence was secured during the week of an incident which puts certain of the leaders in the local jobbers' conflict in such a ridiculous light that it will probably be hard for some people to believe it.

There is a certain New England summer beverage which has a wide sale through the middle States. It was introduced in Philadelphia only a comparatively short time ago, and the local broker who had the account decided in the beginning that he would first give the jobbers a reasonable time to take up the goods, and that during that period he would not sell the Retail Grocers' Association. He so told the jobbers, and the writer knows that he has kept his word.

Within the last few weeks the broker in charge of the sale of this drink received an order from a local wholesale grocery house which is a member in good standing of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of Pennsylvania New Jersey and Delaware, the organization which it will be remembered is doing its best to destroy the Retail Grocers' Association. The order was for 250 cases, which, while large, was even less than orders received for these particular goods from jobbers smaller than this buyer.

Naturally, since it came from a wholesale grocer, the order was accepted and filled. Obviously there is not the slightest reason why it should not have been. The broker congratulated himself upon having landed a good order and felt quite elated over it until a few days later he received a letter from his house. In the letter was inclosed a complaint which had been sent direct to the house by William Montgomery & Co., the Philadelphia wholesale grocers. Montgomery & Co., be it said, have stirred up more petty trouble than any other local jobber in the present fight, and have incidentally suffered more than any other jobber at the hands of resentful retailers.

The letter of Montgomery & Co. to the manufacturer of this summer beverage was childish, untruthful and ridiculous. It was written by William Montgomery personally and alleged that Mr. Montgomery's fellow-member of the Wholesale Grocers' Association who had given the 250-case order had not bought it for himself but for the Retail Grocers' Association. That being true, Mr. Montgomery, in words that actually whined, cold type though they were, said he wanted the firm to take back 189 cases of the goods that he still had on hand.

The letter was referred to the firm's Philadelphia broker for reply. If Mr. Montgomery has any sense of fairness or logic the letter he received from the broker will probably cause him a few humiliated moments. Just one pregnant paragraph of it is as follows:—

> And are you acting for the best interest of the jobbers in their organized stand against the Association? For surely if all were to assume the same attitude toward me as you have done, it would necessarily force me to do the very thing the organized jobbers are fighting to prevent.
> Relative to the stock which you have on hand, I am authorized by my house to give you the privilege of disposing of same as you may see fit.

But by far the most amazing feature of the incident is the utterly foolish attitude taken by Montgomery & Co., who because they are ringleaders in the local fight, must be considered as representing in this incident the Wholesale Grocers' Association as an organization.

The jobbers claim that no manufacturer should sell the Retail Grocers' Association direct. That manufacturers should confine direct sales to jobbers, and that the Retail Grocers' Association should be forced to buy all their goods through jobbers.

In the case under consideration a member of the Wholesale Grocers' Association bought 250 cases of goods. Although the writer is wholly without knowledge of the actual facts, let it be admitted for argument's sake, that this jobber immediately resold the goods to the Retail Grocers' Association, and it must also go without saying that he did so at a profit satisfactory to himself. Let it even be admitted that he bought to fill a definite order from the Retail Grocers' Association, which may or may not be true, what possible reason has the Wholesale Grocers' Association to complain? Here is a bona fide sale from manufacturer to jobber and from jobber to the Retail Grocers' Association—what more can the Wholesale Grocers' Association want except to prevent anybody from selling the Retail Grocers' Association?

As a matter of fact, that is probably just what jobbers of the Montgomery stripe do want, though while there are protective laws in the land they are quite certain not to get it.

It will be pleasant for other members of the Wholesale Grocers' Association to hear now of the results of their brainy colleague's clever move. The soft drink house referred to in this article, which, as stated, has hitherto sold only jobbers, and which is now boycotted by Montgomery & Co. simply because it sold a jobber who resold to the retailers' association, has now announced that because it is apparently quite unable to please the Wholesale Grocers' Association no matter what it does, it will henceforth fill direct any order which the Retail Grocers' Association is pleased to give it.

Bread-by-Weight Fight On.

Secretary Kane, of the Allegheny, Pa., Retail Merchants' Protective Association, has One Dealer Fined and Will Prosecute Forty Others. Association Resolves that Bread Must be Sold by Weight Only.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Pittsburg, Pa., April 16, 1908.

The first of the bread-by-weight cases inspired by the Allegheny Retail Merchants' Association resulted in the conviction of George W. Moore, a baker in the Fifth Avenue Arcade, who was yesterday ordered to forfeit $10 and costs by Alderman Heber McDowell, before whom he was arraigned on a charge of selling short-weight loaves of bread. The prosecution was based on an act of 1793, which was resurrected by the Allegheny County Merchants' Protective Association, which is waging war against dealers who sell loaves of bread that weigh less than 16 ounces.

Informations will now be made against about 40 other bread dealers who are selling loaves of bread that weigh 12 or 13 ounces instead of 16 ounces, as required by the ancient law. The case of Moore is said to be the tenth on record based on the act of 1793.

Information has also been made against Edward M. Lanigan, No. 508 Federal street, and Christian Limburg, Ohio and Chestnut streets, North Side, charging them with selling oleomargarine in packages that were not properly marked. Both were held for court.

The protective association is waging war against dealers who do not comply with the weights and measures laws and other similar requirements which give them an advantage over dealers who comply with these laws.

Secretary R. M. P. A.

Little Interest in Mocha Coffee Meeting.

Trade Paid Practically No Attention to Last Wednesday's Meeting of Federal Food and Drug Board on Above Subject.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 17, 1908.

But little interest was taken in the meeting of the Federal Food and Drug Board on Wednesday last to discuss the question of what can and what cannot be sold as Mocha coffee. To determine whether, through long usage of the name "Mocha," coffee grown in Abyssinia should be allowed the label, the board has gathered information from the United States Consuls abroad, as well as from coffee importers in this country.

A decision will probably be rendered shortly without any further effort to hold meetings.

Pennsylvania Food Commissioner to Get After Storage Egg Frauds, Too

Will Ask Next Pennsylvania Legislature to Pass an Act Controlling the Matter. Several Other New Food Laws Projected. Ice Cream and Milk to be Standardized. Soft Drinks; also, to be Brought into Control of New Law.

Dairy and Food Commissioner James Foust, of Pennsylvania, has several plans in his mind for further changes in the present system of food laws in this State. Some of these plans comprehend the amendment of the present act, others the introduction of new acts, covering adulterated drinks and creating standards of purity and strength for ice cream and milk. A law restricting the sale of storage eggs and poultry is also a most important move which is taking shape in the mind of the Commissioner.

The Executive Committee of the Ice Cream Manufacturers of Pennsylvania will co-operate with the Dairy and Food Division in preparing an act regulating the sanitary condition of ice cream factories, including cans and all appliances connected with the manufacture of ice cream. The leading manufacturers of ice cream are already at the front so far as sanitary conditions are concerned, but they are not satisfied. They are anxious to secure conditions that will put all factories upon the same level and effectively protect the public health.

The same committee will prepare an act fixing a standard of butter fat for ice cream and plainly designating what it shall consist of. This is likewise a step of great importance. While the right to manufacture imitation ice cream may be conceded, the right to sell it as a substitute for the genuine article is not conceded and should be everywhere denied.

An act will be prepared and presented regulating the sale of cold storage eggs and poultry. Some things that have come to the surface during recent months indicate the very great need of such a law. This is one of the most important moves contemplated by the department.

A bill will also be presented regulating the manufacture and sale of all kinds of non-alcoholic drinks, and there will be a similar bill regulating the manufacture and sale of alcoholic drinks.

The Dairy and Food Division has recently presented an array of striking facts in connection with the dangerous qualities of many of the so-called summer drinks as to show the need for a law providing for the prompt and severe punishment of anybody putting into any of these drinks ingredients injurious to the human stomach or likely to destroy health or shorten life. In many cases last summer agents of the department secured samples of cheap soda water, lemonade, pop and other non-alcoholic drinks which contained acids in such quantities as to make them dangerous to the consumer.

Another act will provide for the regulation of the sale of milk and cream, fixing the standard of butter fat for cream at 18 per cent. and prohibiting the sale of milk in this Commonwealth containing any added water or which has any portion of the butter fat abstracted.

The Legislature will be asked to make a number of changes in the present general food law. Just what these are are not yet indicated by the department.

Trade Begins to Want Jar Prices.

Prospects Point to Heavy Fruit Crop, which Means Large Demand for Jars. No Jobber has Enough Carry-over Jars for a Heavy Year and Some have None.

Some of the trade are beginning to be exercised about the non-appearance of prices on Mason fruit jars for the season of 1908. Some of the independent manufacturers of other patented jars have named prices on the same basis as last year, but none of the important manufacturers of Mason jars have given the slightest indication of what prices will be. As stated last week, the reason for that is that the makers have not made much money in recent years, partly through the practice of opening prices in January, and partly because both the makers and the jobbers carried over large numbers of jars from last year, owing to the small fruit crop.

The matter of jar prices is beginning to attract attention because of the prospects of a large fruit crop in all quarters. The danger point is naturally not yet past, but the season has been favorable so far, and unless something happens, the crop of all fruits will be larger than for many years. Especially as to peaches, the Delaware growers are preparing for a heavy crop and many are expecting a record-breaker. The strawberry crop also bids fair to be large, and all this means a tremendous demand for fruit jars. While many jobbers have last year's stocks on hand, even those who have the most have not enough for a big year, and some have practically none on hand at all. The trade generally are beginning to be interested in future prices.

If the expected large fruit crop materializes, the prices of fruit jars will almost surely be high during the whole of the coming season.

Prominent Dried Fruit Firm Denies Bleached Fruit Statements

Bown Bros., of New York State, Contend that Mr. Ryder's Statements as to Use of Sulphur in Dried Fruits are Incorrect. Ridicules Mr. Ryder's Disgust at Food Because Insects Won't Eat It.

We have read in recent issue of the "Grocery World a letter from Mr. Jacob F. Ryder, of Waynesboro, Pa., addressed to the Pennsylvania Food Commissioner, in reference to so-called "bleaching" of evaporated apples with sulphur.

Some of the deductions that this gentleman arrives at are so absurd that they are actually amusing.

In the first place, evaporated apples are not bleached. The action of sulphur fumes simply arrests decay and prevents consequent discoloration until the fruit can be subjected to heat and the moisture evaporated—and contrary to the learned gentleman's statement—bruised, or hard, green fruit, does not come out white. It is customary in trimming fruit to cut out bruised spots, which otherwise appear in the evaporated product nearly as distinctly as before sulphuring.

Now, as to the "proof" offered as to the unwholesomeness of sulphured fruit, it had never occurred to the writer heretofore to select his diet on the "taste" of flies, gnats, etc., and we are hardly prepared yet to accept their "tastes" as a "sine qua non." These, hitherto considered, useful insects have been placed in our mind in the "scavenger" class, and while they undoubtedly have some tastes that are correct from the human standpoint, we hardly think Mr. Ryder would care to include in his dietary much of the putrefaction and offal that they invariably cluster and feed on with much apparent satisfaction.

As to the statement that "little if any of the poison can be dissipated by evaporation," we have only to refer to the results obtained by chemical analyses by the National Pure Food Department and others, showing in the case of evaporated apples, where prepared by modern and improved processes, in many cases not even a trace of sulphur dioxide, and in others from a trace to 50 milligrams per kilogram, an amount so ridiculously small that even the most radical pure food reformer would hardly claim that it was injurious.

(Food Inspection Decision No. 76 allows the presence of 350 milligrams per kilogram.)

Farther, chemists admit that practically all sulphur dioxide is dissipated by cooking.

The plan that Mr. Ryder suggests for dispensing with sulphur by evaporating immediately after paring and slicing and before the fruit has a chance to discolor, is all right, theoretically. Practically, it is without merit. In actual commercial practice the fruit would become discolored during trimming, etc., with the result that the product would approximate the old sun-dried article, which might appeal to those who want an article of food favored (and flavored) by flies, gnats, etc., but we do not think this standard is one that appeals to the average consumer, as has been proven by the growth and development of the evaporated apple industry in the last thirty years.

Prior to that time an "evaporated apple" proper was hardly known, and only an insignificant part of the second grade of apples was used in this or any manner, but with the discovery of the evaporating process as now used, the superior quality of the product made a new market for this article, so that now the trade in it runs up in the millions of dollars, much of which is export, and brings to the apple growers and the laborers of the apple sections much money which would otherwise go absolutely to waste.

We have no patience with those who would thoughtlessly or viciously tear down an industrial structure which it has taken years to develop and build up, or to unnecessarily discredit an article which we sell in foreign markets, and which time and experience has shown is not only not injurious, but actually a healthful adjunct to the dietary of millions of people all over the world. We have yet to learn of an instance of actual injury to health from the use of evaporated apples, and we believe that an article as well as a man "should be presumed to be innocent until proven guilty."

Colored French Vegetables Get Another Lease of Life.

The attorneys representing the importers of colored French vegetables took the matter of their status up with Washington again during the week with the result that information was received that Secretary Cortelyou sees no reason to change his opinion as heretofore expressed, and that in meantime no change in the customary course of business is anticipated and, therefore, the trade is not prohibited from conducting its business as heretofore. This information has been conveyed to the trade and orders have been cabled abroad. This is taken to mean that no interference will be made with the importation of colored French vegetables.

Germany Will Stop Fake Sales.

Bill Introduced to Stop Sales of Bankrupt Goods which are Not Bankrupt. Also to Stop Padding of Special Closing-out Sales with Extra Goods.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 16, 1908.

Germany is again in the lead with a movement to forbid fake sales similar to those which thrive in the United States. Sales of "bankrupt goods" and special closing out sales which are padded will be absolutely forbidden under heavy penalty if a bill already introduced in that country becomes a law.

The Federal Government of Germany has submitted to the governments of the individual States the draft of a bill, to be laid before the national Legislature, which is to check an abuse in the retail business, the selling-off procedure whereby the purchasing public is deceived and honest business competitors are seriously injured. The new bill purposes to amend the present law against "illicit competition." It fixes (1) a penalty of 5,000 marks ($1,190) fine, or imprisonment up to twelve months, if a person advertises or offers goods for sale as being part of the stock of a bankrupt unless such person has been actually authorized by a receiver in bankruptcy or a legally constituted authority, or (2) when a person or firm, having announced the selling off of the stock in order to close business, adds goods to the stock in order to increase the sales.

The penalty applies even where it is proved that the stock has been increased before the announcement for "selling out" was made in terms like these: "Total closing-out sales on account of death," or "to reduce business," or "on account of lack of storage room," or "to get rid of old stock," and similar devices used to mislead the public.

The German Government has always been more strict in its supervision over retail and wholesale businesses than the United States. Sales of the kind to be tabooed in Germany flourish in the United States, especially in the department stores.

The Laborer and His Hire.

Some manufacturers are beginning to take the attitude that no jobber shall be paid the full profit on goods, orders for which have been worked up by the manufacturers' own salesmen. As is well known, jobbers will not sell many proprietary goods for which the manufacturer has not himself created the demand. Confronted by the jobbers' refusal to do more than fill orders procured by others, the manufacturer has had to send out men at his own expense to get the orders which were afterward turned in through some jobber. At the mercy of the jobber as to delivering goods, the manufacturer has usually given him the full profit for this sort of service.

At least one large manufacturer that the "Grocery World" knows of has changed his plan in this respect. In all cases where the jobber works the trade himself, with his own men and at his own expense, this manufacturer fixes it so that the jobber makes $1.10 per gross. But if the manufacturer has to do the missionary work, and get the orders, the jobber is permitted to make only 50 cents. That seems to the "Grocery World" only fair.

Of two jobbers, one of whom pushes a proprietary article himself, and the other of whom simply fills orders gotten by manufacturers' salesmen, it certainly seems unfair to pay to both the same profit. Very probably the time will come when both will not receive the same profit.

The Dividends of a Co-operative Buying Organization.

Certain wholesale grocers who would be selfishly interested in the destruction of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, and who are doing everything they can to accomplish its destruction, are persistently circulating a falsehood concerning the association's method of rebating its members. Using as an illustration Ivory soap, which, as stated last week, has been up to this time listed at $7, the limited jobbing price, the jobbers declare that at the end of the month the member who has paid $7 is paid a rebate of 50 cents, thus cutting the price to $6.50 just as effectually as if $6.50 had been the basis of sale in the beginning.

This is not true. It is a fact that once each month every purchasing member of the Retail Grocers' Association receives a dividend from the profits or the margins of the business. The association does not aim to make a profit, but occasionally in the course of business market changes make savings here and there which can be called profits for lack of a better term. Included in these profits, so-called, may or may not be the 50 cents per box difference between the $6.50 which the association paid for Ivory soap and the $7 which its members paid it. Is not that 50 cents in every case profit? Does not the Procter & Gamble Co. intend it to be profit? And being profit, is it not perfectly legitimate to distribute it to the stockholders of the company as dividends? That is exactly the way in which it is distributed—as unitemized dividends.

Take the Merchants' Wholesale Grocery Co. of Philadelphia, a concern recognized on all sides as a jobber. The Merchants' Wholesale Grocery Co. is an organization of retail grocers formed for the specific purpose of buying co-operatively. Its members pay it the list price on various goods, and receive at stated intervals the difference between cost and selling price as dividends. Is the Merchants' Wholesale Grocery Co. any less a jobber because it pays its profits to their rightful owners, its stockholders? Does it make any difference that those stockholders happen also to be customers? The fact that the Merchants' Wholesale Grocery Co. will sell goods to anybody, members and non-members, has nothing to do with the principle involved, which is the right of a wholesale grocery company to distribute its profits to its stockholders whether those stockholders are customers or not, without being considered as rebating, cutting the price, or transgressing its position as a jobber.

Take a regular wholesale grocery house, incorporated as a corporation, with certain large retail customers as stockholders. There are such concerns. A jobbing house like this buys Ivory soap at $6.50 and sells it to the general retail trade, including its retail stockholders, at the limited jobbing price of $7. The 50 cents' difference, with other profits, goes to the retail stockholders, among other stockholders, as lump dividends. Is this house rebating? Is it cutting the price? Is it any the less a jobber because it pays dividends to stockholders who are retailers?

Follow the argument where you will, there is neither logic in the jobbers' position nor truth in their contention that the Retail Grocers' Association lacks the right to buy direct as a jobber and dispose of its profits with the same freedom as any other corporation.

The Mercurial Tomato Market.

The tomato market has once more proven that of all lines of staple merchandise, it is the most impossible to forecast. Last fall, after the 1907 pack was over, the trade as usual began to take account of stock. The pack was believed to be ample, but the stock in packers' hands was light, and everything looked strong and healthy, with higher prices in sight. The wholesale price of No. 3 Maryland standard tomatoes at that time was 87½ cents, f. o. b. factory, in a large way.

As the season advanced it became more and more apparent, so all available information said, that packers had very little stock, and prospects became even firmer. Some packers began to hold out for 90 cents f. o. b. Everybody prophesied that prices would be high throughout the season.

Time has gone on and it has never ceased to be apparent that "packers' stocks were small." Even when the packing figures came out and seemed to show that the 1907 production was larger than ever before, the wiseacres still contended that packers' stocks were small and the situation did not perceptibly weaken.

To-day the price of No. 3 Maryland standard tomatoes is 75 cents f. o. b.—12½ cents less than six months ago. The market has done what it has done repeatedly before—the very thing that was unnatural for it to do, if conditions were as represented. And packers' stocks are still small.

All of which demonstrates that there is nothing fixed about any phase of the tomato market. There is nothing fixed about the production, and particularly not about the statements that are made about it, either past or prospective. There is nothing fixed about the standard of the product itself either in weight or fineness. There is nothing fixed about the reputation or reliability of many of the packers, nor in the methods of doing business between packer and jobber.

Wouldn't it be a fine thing to get something fixed about it?

The Canadian Private Label Ruling.

Information received from Canada during the week and published in another column, states that the Dominion Government has debarred jobbers' private canned labels, requiring that the label must in every case be that of the actual packer.

If this is true, it is going too far. In fact it is difficult to see how the Canadian Government or any other could legally make such a ruling. It is perfectly proper to do what the United States Government does—forbid the use of the jobber's name or a fictitious name as packer. That is misbranding and a technical fraud. But to go further and say that no private label shall be used, not even one which makes all proper disclosures and does not misrepresent, reminds one of some of Dr. Wiley's rulings.

Heavy Record of Grocery Failures.

First Quarter of 1908 Shows More Grocery Disasters than for Same Period for Five Years Past.

The official report of grocery and general store failures for the first quarter of the year continues to show a heavy increase over the same quarter of 1907. As a matter of fact, the first quarter of 1908 shows more grocery and general store failures than for the same period of any years as far back as 1904. The report does not extend further back than that.

The figures are as follows: General stores, first quarter of 1908, 690; liabilities, $5,758,044; same quarter of 1907, 451; liabilities, $2,980,684.

Grocery stores, first quarter of 1908, 844; liabilities, $4,058,132; same quarter of 1907, 594; liabilities, $1,890,299.

This is by far the largest record of grocery failures in five years, the next largest being 612 in the first quarter of 1905, and the smallest in the five years being 516 in the same quarter of 1906.

Lots of poor salad is coming forward. Good Florida salad ranges from $2.50 to $2.75 per crate and near-by $4 to $6 per 100 heads. The demand is good.

A Business Worse than Groceries

If I sympathize more with any one than I do with the city grocer who has to go to the wharf to buy produce every morning at 2 o'clock, it is with the wholesale produce dealer who sells it to him when he gets there.

I have a number of friends and clients in the wholesale produce business, and I thought I knew pretty well what they have to go through.

Yet I never realized it quite clearly until one day last week when I listened to the sigh of a veteran produce dealer whose whole life has been spent in this one line of work.

"I'm 61 years old," he said, "and I've been in the produce business all my life. I'm too old now to get into anything else. If I could I surely would. To be sure, I've always made a living, and as the business is out doors I've had good health. But it's not the business any man wants to go into if he has a family and likes domestic life.

"Why, many and many a time," he continued, "I haven't seen my children for a week at a time. We close here in the spring and summer around 1 or 2 o'clock. I go home and go to bed about half-past two. The children were in school or playing somewhere. At 11 o'clock, when the alarm goes off, I get up. The children are asleep. The same thing has gone on day after day from one Sunday, when I'm home, until the next."

Just muse on that, you grocery fathers who think the grocery business is hard lines. Think of a business that makes you a stranger to your own babies!

"The same thing has happened with my wife," continued the produce man. "I've often gone home in the middle of the afternoon and found her downtown shopping. I'd go to bed—I always slept in a separate room, so as not to disturb her—and when I got up again around midnight, she'd be fast asleep. That has often happened for two or three days at a time."

Right here the "Stroller" would probably dwell upon the feelings of a wife prevented from talking to her husband for three days together, though living in the same house with him. Seriously, what grocer could deny that a business involving such sacrifices is worse than his business?

In the spring, summer and early fall the wholesale produce man has no more social life than a convict at hard labor. It is up at midnight, over to the receiving depot, frantic bidding for goods until he gets what he wants, then quickly back to his store to resell to the dealers that crowd the markets in the early morning. At one or two he closes and goes home. To sport? No, to sleep, and just as the rest of the world are turning in, after an evening of stroll or pleasure, he turns out and begins it all over again.

No quiet smoke on the porch—no stroll in the park—no trolley rides—no theatre; sleep and work; sleep and work; sleep and work.

Who would be a wholesale produce man? E. J. B.

Oleo Attracting Attention. Oleo Dealers Will Make Strong Fight for Retention of Their Present Advantage in New York State. Food Show Closes, Netting Several Thousands. Small News of the Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, April 17, 1908.

The revival of the oleomargarine business in this city and State is attracting a great deal of attention in both the wholesale and retail trade and the interest in the subject is likely to increase. While there has always been some traffic here in oleomargarine, yet the business has been under cover of late years and the open trading in the product is something distinctly new.

To the court's decision in the Cooper case, as it is known, the change is due. It is held substantially that oleomargarine may lawfully be sold in this State if the package is properly marked to show what it is and if there has been no coloring for the purpose of deception. Until this decision was rendered, it was supposed that the law of this State prohibited all traffic in the product.

Much activity on the part of the oleomargarine dealers followed close on the decision. Hotelkeepers and the proprietors of eating houses and restaurants received circulars in which they were told that oleomargarine is an agreeable and healthful product and that money may be saved by using it in preference to butter.

One of the department stores advertised that it has oleomargarine for sale. People are invited to call and test the product for themselves. It is said that demonstrations are given to show how people after they buy the product may color it to suit, but your correspondent could not verify this.

The New York Mercantile Exchange, which comprises the largest receivers of butter in this city, held a meeting yesterday at which H. J. Kracke, the Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture of New York, spoke on the condition brought about by the recent court decision. He pointed out the many ways in which the oleomargarine will now be sold and used instead of butter. The hotels and restaurants of the cheaper class can readily substitute the oleomargarine for butter and the people who eat the product will not know the difference. In boarding houses the same result will follow. The name which must be on the package in the store is not required to follow the food to the table, and he believed that this is one of the principal ways in which people will be deceived.

In the discussion of the subject it was said that the Federal laws will not interfere with the traffic. The Federal authorities will see only that the tax is paid and that the oleomargarine is properly marked when sold in the stores.

The Assistant Commissioner suggested that the exchange place itself on record in favor of the bill introduced in the Assembly at Albany by C. Boshart, in which the manufacture and sale of any imitation of butter is absolutely prohibited. The bill says that no person shall make from any animal fat or from any animal or vegetable oils not produced from unadulterated milk or cream the article known as oleomargarine or any article in imitation of natural butter. It is expressly provided that the imitation is illegal whether it imitates the color, taste or flavor of natural butter.

The exchange decided to indorse the bill and to send copies of its resolution to the representatives at Albany.

Meantime the advocates of oleomargarine continue to circulate wherever possible the claims as to the merits of the product. They trace its history back to the siege of Paris. They tell of the great care exercised in obtaining the fat of the cattle, which is said to be identical chemically with the fat of butter and of mixing it with the choicest leaf lard and certain proportions of real butter and milk in order that the mixture may be churned and may have the necessary fineness. And they claim that the best judges of butter cannot always distinguish the difference by the taste alone.

The Food Exposition of the New York Retail Grocers' Union closed last night, after having drawn large crowds daily since the opening. The exact financial result is not yet known of course, but it will be represented by a profit of several thousand dollars, it is understood, that will be added to the treasury of the Union. Considering that the present is not a boom time in business, the result is the more gratifying.

Again an amended garnishee bill is before Governor Hughes for his action. Last year he vetoed amendments to the garnishee bill but hope is entertained that he will approve the bill in the form in which it has just passed the Legislature. The changes are in increasing the class of debts in which garnishee proceedings may be taken and in reducing the limit of weekly earnings or income subject to the provisions of the law to $12.

The New York and the Brooklyn Unions will send delegations to the convention of the National Retail Grocers' Association in Boston, May 11 to 14, but the Bronx association will not be represented because of its funds having been tied up until within a few days ago in one of the closed banks as a result of which it did not pay its per capita tax in time. The upstate societies will all send delegates. Besides the delegates, it is believed that quite a number of the members in this city will take advantage of the occasion to make a pleasant, profitable trip to the convention. Copies of the programme of the meeting reached here this week and the members are pleased with it.

Th Brooklyn banks which closed in the financial panic last Fall, accompanied with some tragic features, have been reopened one by one, much to the relief of many grocers who have been put to inconvenience and embarrassment by having their funds tied up in these institutions. Most of these banks have a distinctly new management.

More sales of grocery stores by auction and otherwise have taken place of late than usual. One of the oldest grocers said that under present conditions the man who has been doing business on credit instead of on capital of his own, may find it convenient to retire. Also, some grocers who for various reasons have been contemplating retirement, are likely to look on the present conditions as a reason for doing now what they would probably do anyway within a short time. These facts, it was added, do not indicate that there is anything discouraging in business and those who are careful have nothing to fear. Some grocers say that their trade is about as large as ever and one can find some who say that this year's business is the largest in their experience, but, of course, the latter instances are due to exceptional causes.

The report of the Schwarzschild and Sulzberger Co., the independent meat packing company for thirteen months ended with February 1 was given out this week. It shows earnings of $912,885 as compared with $922,758 in the preceding thirteen months. This is cited as showing that the provision trade has not decreased much. During the period covered by the report, the company added largely to its surplus.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market continues in good, steady position, no change having occurred during the week. The demand is fair for the season, and prices remain unchanged as compared with a week ago. Low grades are steady to firm, but will probably show no further advance, as the end of the season is approaching. Other grades are fairly steady.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee is about steady at unchanged prices. There has been a heavy speculative business doing in options on the exchange, but the most of it has been in the way of postponed deliveries to future months, showing the desire of the syndicate to keep from receiving more coffee whenever possible. Actual Rio and Santos coffee is steady and unchanged, the consumptive demand being moderate. Milds are steady and unchanged. Java and Mocha both unchanged and quiet.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market shows no further change for the week, but is still firm almost everywhere. Refined is unchanged, but further advances may come as soon as the refiners decide it politic to announce them. There has been very little buying by jobbers at the last advanced price, 5.40 cents for granulated, most of the trade having been let in at the old figure. The demand for refined sugar is fair. Most of the trade are looking forward to a heavy summer business.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week. Compound syrup shows no change in price and very little demand. Sugar syrup is steady and in excellent demand. Molasses is unchanged and dull, the selling season being about over.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market is very weak and unsettled. Spot tomatoes nominally rule at 75 cents delivered, but some sales are reported to have been made at 72½ cents. Futures are nominally unchanged at 77½ cents, f. o. b., but some people claim to have had offers at 75 cents. The situation is unquestionably very disturbing to the holder of a large stock of tomatoes, if there is any such. The market seems hopelessly heavy and weak, and at the present writing there seems to be no likelihood of any material recovery. Corn is dull, and as to spot goods, very weak. Futures are fairly well maintained. Peas are weak also, the spot market being decidedly in buyers' favor. The demand is light. Futures are fairly steady. Apples are not strong and lack demand. Peaches are unchanged, being dull and high. Small Baltimore canned goods are unchanged and dull. The California line of canned goods is in quiet business at prices that from first hands are unchanged. Many jobbers, however, have large stocks on hand and would probably make concessions to move them. Asparagus has been a particularly poor seller during the past season, and most holders are willing to offer it at below the price paid.

Fish.

The fish market has been firm but quiet. Norway and Irish mackerel are scarce and high in price, but very dull at the present time. And since cuts in the price would not stimulate the demand, values are just as firm as ever. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged in price and very dull. Domestic sardines are quiet and not very firm. The packers have not generally named future prices as yet. Imported sardines are firm and quiet. Salmon is still dull, though its season of large consumption is approaching. Prices on futures have not yet been named.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are very soggy, and sales at a 2-cent basis have been made during the past week. This is the lowest price reached during the present decline. The demand is light. Peaches also tend downward, and very much demoralized. The demand, however, is better than when the price was high. Apricots have likewise gone to pieces and some grades show a decline of 7 or 8 cents per pound. All these declines can be credited to the probability of a heavy fruit crop in all lines, in California, and the certainty that if there is only a fair crop prices will be much below even the declined prices now ruling. Currants are dull and unchanged. Raisins are still very weak and unsettled, and the demand is light. Apples are soft and in light demand. Citron, dates and figs are all unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans, both imported and domestic, are unchanged from last week and in fair demand. Marrows likewise show no change from a week ago and are moderately

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

wanted. California limas rule at exactly last week's prices and are fairly active. Split and dried peas are still firm, but in light demand.

Butter.

There has been some increase in the make of butter during the past week, and the market both as to prints and solids has declined 2 cents per pound. Stocks of storage butter are getting very low and further changes are likely as the weather becomes warmer. The quality of the present receipts is very good. Under grades declined in sympathy with the fancy grades.

Eggs.

The egg market is unchanged. The receipts have been about normal, and the consumptive as well as the speculative demand has been very active. No change seems likely during the coming week. The market is in healthy condition throughout.

Cheese.

The cheese market is steady at a decline of ¼ cent below the prices of a week ago. Owing to recent high prices cheese has not been selling as well as it should at this season. In order to help the demand the price was declined and the effect has been immediate—the demand shows a decided improvement. No lower prices are likely in the near future.

Provisions.

There has continued a very active demand for all smoked meats during the week, and prices show an advance of ¼ to ½ cent a pound throughout the line. The consumptive demand, as usual for the season, is very good. Pure and compound lard are both firm at an advance of ¼ cent over last week. Dried beef, barrel pork and canned meats are unchanged, with only a fair demand reported.

Produce.

Ohio globe onions, $1.50 per bushel; York State, $1.50 per bushel, scarce and good demand; Bermudas, $2.50 per crate, demand fair; Spanish, small crates, 90 cents to $1; large crates, $1.25, demand fair; Pennsylvania potatoes, $1 to $1.05 per bushel; York State, 90 cents to $1 per bushel, demand good; sweet potatoes, firsts, $1.15 per basket; seconds, 65 cents per basket, demand good; carrots, 50 cents per basket, $2 per barrel, demand good; yellow turnips, 40 cents per basket, demand good; beets, $1 per barrel, demand fair; Danish cabbage, $15 per ton, demand good; watercress, $2 per 100 bunches, demand fair; oyster plants, 2½ to 3 cents per bunch, demand fair; scullions, $1 per 100 bunches, demand good; horseradish, $3.50 per barrel, demand fair; Pennsylvania salad, 3 to 5 cents per bunch, demand good; spinach, $1.25 per barrel, demand good; radishes, $1 to $3 per 100, demand good; rhubarb, $2 to $4 per 100 bunches, demand good.

Green Fruit.

Apples, Baldwins, $2.50 to $4; Hulbersons, $3; Spy, $3 to $4; Spitz, $2.50 to $3.50; Russets, $2.50 to $2.75, demand good; grapefruit, $2.50 to $5.50 per box, demand fair; Florida oranges, $3 to $3.50 per box; California, $2.75 to $3.40 per box, demand fair to good; pineapples, $2.50 to $4 per box, demand fair to good; lemons, $2.25 to $2.75 per box, demand fair; bananas, jumbo, $1.75 to $2.25 per bunch; firsts, $1.50 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1.15 to $1.35 per bunch; 7-hands, 85 cents to $1 per bunch; 6-hands, 60 to 75 cents per bunch, demand fair.

Nuts.

Peanuts, roasted, choice, $1.05 per bushel; fancy, $1.30 per bushel; jumbo, $1.55 per bushel; green, choice, 4¼ cents per pound; fancy, 5½ cents per pound; jumbo, 6½ cents per pound, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazil, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 9¾ cents per pound; walnuts, 12½ to 14 cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

"Skipper" Sardines.

THEY'LL SUIT YOU TO A TEA

There's a Difference. There is much difference in the quality of Sardines and the preparation of same prior to the sealing of the tins as there is in ham or bacon properly and improperly cured.

Here's the Difference. "Skipper" Sardines must be alive when taken out of the water. Fish which are dead when taken from the water are not fit to eat, yet tons are canned every year.

"Skipper" Sardines are scientifically cured under the most complete sanitary conditions. If this were true of all Sardines we would not have so much to say about quality.

"Skipper" Sardines are all autumn caught. Spring-caught fish are not fit to eat, still tons of spring-caught fish are canned every year and consumed by the unsuspecting public.

"Skipper" Sardines are not only packed in pure Olive Oil; but the oil is first grade. This cannot be said of the oil in which many other brands of Sardines are packed.

Until you have tried "Skipper" Sardines you will never be able to say you have tried the best.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

It begins to look like an improvement is coming shortly in the canned goods market, especially for tomatoes, for both spot and future deliveries. Generally speaking, the forerunner of an advancing market for tomatoes is almost sure to be an increased demand for the lowest-priced line of seconds, which continues until they advance pretty close to the prices asked for good brands of standard quality, and then the latter begin to stiffen up. There was evidence of that sort apparent during the past ten days so far as seconds tomatoes are concerned, and in this week there has been an increase in the demand for standard tomatoes for prompt shipment. The canners have not advanced their prices as yet because they want to feel assured that the market is gradually getting into a more favorable position and, in the meantime, they don't want to scare off any buyers by advancing the price without good reason. If one may judge of the outlook for tomatoes by the large number of inquiries received, concerning the prices and the offerings, then it would be fair to assume that the demand from now on will be sufficient to at least sustain the present market prices with more than a fair chance for an improvement in same. The demand for tomatoes comes from markets widely separated, and that fact gives much encouragement to the holders here. For future delivery there were probably more tomatoes sold during this week than in any one week since the first of the year. Based on the cost of all of the materials that enter into the manufacture of the goods, there does not seem to be any good reason why the price of No. 3 standard tomatoes, for instance, should not be equal to the price paid for the same article last year. At all events the canners of tomatoes are very firm in their selling prices for future delivery and they are not attempting to force their sales at all. A movement among the canners was inaugurated last month for the purpose of making an agreement to reduce the acreage to be planted this year and it looks like it will be successful. Those buyers who are waiting for still lower prices before buying future tomatoes may be glad to pay more money for them later on.

There has been less buying of future goods of all kinds up to this date this season than there ever was since the selling of futures was commenced, and with the exception of tomatoes and corn, it looks like the jobbers will do the bulk of their buying when the actual packing season is on. By-the-way, it will not be very long now before the packing season for 1908 opens up. In four or six weeks from this time our canners will open the season with pineapples and strawberries, and then the regular canning season will be on.

In spot goods the character of the buying continues to be of the same sort as has prevailed since the first of the year, namely, small quantities of assorted goods to make up a carload shipment, but most frequently the shipments are less than carloads. It is a very good thing that the stocks of Baltimore canned goods were so nearly cleaned up last fall before the panic commenced or there might have been some serious decline in the prices of some articles. As it is, however, the canned goods trade has good cause for congratulation as compared with the troubles that manufacturers and jobbers in other lines of goods have experienced.

Spices.

The market is not so active this week. Trading has been small, which is usually expected in spices during the present month.

Pepper.—Small spot supplies are being taken up quickly and little interest is taken in futures, which are slightly higher. Crop reports are uncertain.

Cayennes are very scarce and firm, and lower prices are not looked for.

Mace is steady but quiet. Prime stock continues scarce.

Nutmegs slightly easier during the week, although quotations are practically unchanged.

Gingers.—Stocks are not large and the demand is fair. From foreign reports just received it looks as though the market is advancing.

Seeds.—Caraway is firmer in Holland. Coriander is also up about 3/8 cent per pound. Celery and Mustard remain unchanged.

MARKET NOTES.

Strawberries are now coming from North Carolina and Florida. The price ranges from 10 to 16 cents and the demand is good. Much of the fruit on the market is poor.

Cucumbers from Boston hothouses average $1.25 per dozen and Floridas $3.25 to $4 per one-third barrel basket. The latter is a decline from former prices. The demand for cucumbers is brisk.

New potatoes from Bermuda—there are none as yet from Florida—range from $6.50 to $7 for No. 2s and $7.50 to $8 for No. 1s. The demand is active.

Near-by rhubarb is selling well at 5 to 5½ cents per bunch. The quality is good.

String beans range from $3.75 to $4.50 and are in good demand. The South is the only section shipping beans as yet.

Charleston is now shipping good peas North, averaging $1.75 per one-third barrel basket. The demand is good.

Florida tomatoes range from $2 to $2.75 per crate and sell readily. Hothouse tomatoes range from 17½ to 20 cents per pound and are also wanted.

Red radishes from New Jersey hothouses average 4 cents per bunch, and whites 4½ to 5 cents. The quality is fine and the demand excellent.

New scullions are all from near-by points. They range from $1 to $1.50 per 100 and are wanted.

Charleston asparagus ranges from 25 to 40 cents per bunch, and California $3.50 per box of 12 bunches to $6, which means a range of about 30 to 50 cents per bunch. The demand is good.

Canada Bars Private Canned Goods Labels.

Major Beattie, member of the Canadian Parliament, has brought before the Minister of Agriculture, Hon. Sidney Fisher, a matter which is of considerable interest to wholesale grocers throughout the province. This is the right of wholesale grocers to place their own distinctive labels on canned goods. This has been forbidden by a recent regulation of the department, which requires all canned goods to be labeled by the packers or canners. The jobbers are working for a repeal of the ruling.

Requests for information in this Department should tersely set out in full all the facts bearing on the case, and all questions should be carefully framed to avoid misconstruction. Write on one side of the sheet only. Letters should be received at this office not later than Tuesday of each week to ensure an answer in the Monday's issue following. The signature and address of the writer must accompany all inquiries, and will be published unless there is a request not to do so. All inquiries received will be answered without charge.

Question: J. M. Cowan, Apollo, Pa.—I am in the grocery business to make a living, but as you no doubt are aware, there are other things that concern us for which we are in duty bound to give some attention, and my object in approaching you is to get some information in regard to a matter that is and should be demanding the attention of all good citizens.

My Question.—I am a citizen of Armstrong County, Pa. We have what is called a State prohibitory law, prohibiting the granting of a license to sell intoxicating liquors within our borough or within two miles of the limits of our borough line. Will this protect us from the granting of a license in an adjoining county, that is inside the limits of our prescribed act? Or, in other words, will this law be effective in other counties whose borders are within the limits prescribed?

Answer.—The law referred to has nothing to do with county lines at all. It concerns only this particular borough and the territory immediately surrounding it, and no county can legally grant a license to sell liquor within that territory. This would not be the case if the law in question were a county or a borough ordinance.

After Oleo in New York State.

The authorities of the New York State Agricultural Department are determined to drive oleomargarine out of the market altogether and since they were dealt a severe blow in the recent decision in the McAuley case, whereby the court held that anyone could sell oleomargarine if it was not represented as butter, they have been busy framing an amendment whereby prosecution will hold and anyone can be convicted who sells oleo under any circumstances. To that end and on invitation of Assistant Commissioner Kracke of the local bureau of the New York Agricultural Department, a public meeting of the members of the New York Mercantile Exchange was held recently to consider the bill introduced at Albany by Assemblyman Boshart to amend the agricultural law in relation to oleaginous substances "manufactured in imitation or semblance of butter." After a full discussion of the matter and an address by Mr. Kracke, the following resolution was presented and unanimously adopted:—

> Resolved, That the Mercantile Exchange heartily endorses the amendment to Section 26, Assembly Bill 2,156, of the Agricultural law, and urges its speedy enactment.

The bill endorsed would effectually prohibit the sale of oleo in New York State.

State Secretary Howes, of the Pennsylvania Retail Merchants' Association, Sends in Brief Budget of Association News. Reawakening Movement for Repeal of the Mercantile Tax Law.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., April 16, 1908.

At the last meeting of the Williamstown Association it was unanimously agreed that the members were in favor of extending the peddling law now applied to Northumberland County to all sections of the State. By a prior act of 1849 this same law already applies to Dauphin County as well as to Berks and Lebanon Counties.

The Business Men's Association of Butler, Pa., is trying to enforce a borough ordinance which imposes a fine of $25 per day on transient stores. The defendant is the Japanese firm of Yoshimi & Co. Several informations have been made and convictions secured upon three. The defendants have applied to the court for a decision, which will be given the first of the week.

The DuBois Business Men's Exchange has taken action pledging their support of a 10 per cent. garnishee law and repeal of the mercantile tax law.

The following resolution was adopted at the last meeting:—

> Resolved, That the DuBois Business men's Exchange being fully convinced that the parcels post act would work injury to the small merchants, hereby expresses its disapproval of that measure, and that a copy of this resolution be sent our Representative in Congress, with the request that he use every effort to oppose the adoption of such an act.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find one of our monthly circulars; please pass an opinion on it in turn.

Same is made up very much like the C. O. D. Co's ad in this we k's "GroceryWorld."

Yours truly,
MODEL GROCERY CO.
By Campbell, Mgr.

The circular inclosed with this letter was the size of a small handbill. It measured 15 x 22 inches, and was printed in black on white paper. Here is the photographic reproduction, necessarily much reduced:—

This circular in my judgment is too large. If it was to be posted on trees its size would not be against it, but in that case it would be likely to get much poorer results than if placed in people's hands. To pass from house to house, as circulars are usually passed, this circular is unwieldy. It is hard to handle, both by the distributer and the reader and prospective customer. If it was desired to put out as much stuff as this at one time, I should have made the circular into a four-page folder and used better paper.

The point of this circular is special March values, which means reductions in price if it means anything. Yet there is not in all this circular a single indication of any reduction in price. In no case is the regular price quoted side by side with the supposedly reduced price, and the advertisement unquestionably loses a lot of weight on that account. It is extremely easy, after quoting "Grandma's Borax Washing Powder 7 boxes for 25 cents," to say, "regular price always 5 cents a box," or whatever it may be. And the effect of the comparison is immensely strong. The ideal adver-

The Dog May Bite

Honestly, you will be much more likely to succeed by pushing Hotel Astor Coffee than by pushing a blend of your own.

We have been in coffee blending for many years. Obviously, we must know more about it than you do. tisement of this sort gives first the name of the article, then a few lines on its strong point, and then its reduced and regular prices. If there is any merit in the article at all, and the advertising is intelligently done, that method will get results.

This advertiser may say, "it isn't necessary to quote the regular price; all our customers know that, and they can see instantly when a price is quoted which is less than they have been accustomed to pay." But the object of a special sale is not to sell to your own customers at reduced prices things they would have bought anyway at regular prices. It is to sell people who are not your customers, and who for that reason are not familiar with your prices. Also to sell your own customers goods they are not accustomed to buy. For these reasons it is not safe to assume that a reader of your advertisement carries the regular price in his mind. The very people you want to reach most can't possibly know the regular price. Hence the imperative need of telling what it is.

I believe the matter in small type at the bottom under "Fresh Vegetables" and "Fancy Groceries" is a waste of space, in the way in which it appears. There is material there for a dozen advertisements. Take the German preserves—a most effective advertisement could be written on them alone. To let it go at "Raspberry and Strawberry Preserves, All Packed in Germany,' is a great mistake in my judgment.

Loyalty Versus a Nickel.

Loyalty ain't worth much any more when it gets up against a 5-cent piece, is it?

It's a tremendous pity that it can't count more, for it's one of the finest things in the world, I think—loyalty.

I know a wholesale concern in Philadelphia that's dying to-day. Five years from now will probably see it only a recollection.

It's been established fifty years. With never a stain against it of any kind. Always straight and clean in everything it did.

As a matter of fact, that's the main reason why it's slipped behind in business. It won't do the things that some of its competitors do. Its goods were like its principles—clean, fine, high-grade and always what they were represented to be.

Within the last year the members of this firm have cut down their living expenses at least one-third. Their trade has fallen off that much and shows more loss every month. A great deal of their competition comes from New York, where the concerns in their line have found some way of selling cheaper.

This Philadelphia concern could meet this competition, but it won't. Says it will go down, if it has to, with clean hands. Does this impress its old customers enough to hold them? It does not. I asked one of the customers only the other day about it.

"————'s goods have always given you satisfaction, haven't they?" I asked him.

"Sure," was the reply, "they're all right; we've used them for forty years."

"Why have you dropped them now, then?" I asked.

"We can buy a little cheaper off the other fellow," was the answer.

"But are you getting the same value?" I asked.

"Very probably we're not—quite," was the reply, "but we're getting good enough stuff for all practical purposes."

"Don't you feel as if you ought to stick to a concern that has served you well for forty years, and whose goods you admit are perfectly satisfactory to-day?" I asked. "Don't you feel that simple loyalty ought to make you?"

"I wish things were so I could," was the answer, "I really do. But in these days of close profits you can't waste a cent. My competitors go where they can buy cheapest and I have to."

It seems an awful shame to me.

I know a retail grocer up State who had a bad time a couple of years ago. He endorsed for his brother-in-law and got stung. For a while it looked as if he'd fall down.

Just at this time he owed a lot of money to a Pittsburg jobber. No more than he'd often owed before, but before he'd had resources that he didn't have now. Other people had bills against him, and if they'd

Increase Your Profits!

No. 592-9. 1908 Model

This is a new model and is the most complete register ever manufactured. It has nine separate adding counters and nine separate cash drawers. Nine registers in one.

Keeps record of each clerk's sales apart from a total of all the sales. Records number of customers each clerk has waited on, and also the total number of customers. Has counters for "Received on Account," "Charge," and "Paid Out." Prints itemized record under lock and issues check.

Each drawer is provided with a different-toned bell so that each clerk can tell if his drawer is opened by another. Drawers can be locked when clerks are at lunch or out of the store.

The new model is equipped with time printer to print the time of day to the minute when a sale is made. It can also be used for recording the time of arrival and departure of clerks. It also has an autographic attachment which is very valuable in making records of goods wanted or articles called for that are not carried in stock.

Let Us Show You How

You cannot afford to miss success by making mistakes.

Forget one charge sale—and you've lost the profit on ten cash sales.

Forget one payment on account—and you've lost a customer who would have come ten times again to buy.

One dishonest or careless clerk can offset your profit on the sale of ten others.

A National Cash Register Increases Accuracy

The difference between accurate handling of transactions in any store and inaccurate handling of money and credit, is the difference between success and failure.

You know that absolute accuracy in yourself and your clerks not only insures you that you get all the money taken over the counter, but it makes new trade for your store because your reputation for care and exactness is spread all over your city.

all come down on him at once he'd have been a-goner.

The Pittsburg jobber, who was the heaviest creditor, sent for him and they had a long talk. The retailer had a good business and he convinced the jobber that he could climb out of the hole if given a show. The jobber not only carried him, but he lent him a little money and personally went to some of the other creditors and smoothed 'em down.

It was an all-fired generous thing to do, and the retailer told me himself that if the Pittsburg house hadn't stood by him he'd have been down and out.

The thing worked out all right and the retailer got on his feet again in about eighteen months. Naturally he stuck by the Pittsburg jobber like a brother for a long time. One day about a couple of months ago I was in his store and saw a bag of roasted coffee marked "Java and Mocha, 26 cents."

"That's pretty cheap coffee," I said.

"Yes, that's unusually good value," he said.

"Where'd you buy it, at ———'s" I asked, naming the Pittsburg concern.

"No, I got that at ———'s," he replied, mentioning a New York house.

"I thought you bought everything in Pittsburg," I said.

"So I have been," he replied, "but this house offered me this coffee 3 cents under the Pittsburg man's price, and I thought I ought to buy it."

Up to that minute I honestly don't think that the matter of loyalty had entered the man's mind. It did come in then, though.

"I feel that I owe ——— a good deal," he said, "and I have been giving them the preference in everything, but when they're 3 cents higher on an item than I can buy somewhere else for, I simply can't afford to pay it, as much as I'd like to."

"Of course you want to consider the question of value received," I said. "In coffee especially you're likely to get the eyes burnt out of you if you don't watch out. Let's see some of that coffee."

I know a little about coffee, though nobody knows much about it after it's roasted. I looked at a handful of it—I'll bet a dollar to a cent that it had some Santos in—in other words that it wasn't straight Java and Mocha.

I didn't tell him so, for I couldn't have sworn to it. Nevertheless, if I'm right his 3 cents saving isn't a saving at all.

But suppose it was, don't you think that loyalty ought to have made him stick to the Pittsburg price? I think so, on one condition. If he was up against some local condition that made it absolutely necessary that he buy as close as he could, then he couldn't be expected to pay more than the lowest price he could get. But even then it would be squarer to go to the jobber that he owed his business to and put him next to conditions.

Where there was no local condition that made him watch the pennies so close, he ought to have been loyal and paid his extra cent or two. I mean, of course, in cases where there is some reason why loyalty is owed.

That's the way I look at it.

Washington Grocers Will Try to Get Sunday Closing in Country's Capital.

Representatives of the Retail Grocers' Association Ask Senate to Pass a Law Forbidding Sunday Work in Grocery Stores.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 17, 1908.

The grocers of the District of Columbia have begun a campaign to close grocery and all other stores in the capital of the United States on the Sabbath Day. Largely through the influence of the Washington Retail Grocers' Association, there are now two bills before the District Committee on Sunday-closing. One measure aims particularly to relieve the butchers' clerks and grocerymen, who are now compelled, it is said, to work seven days in the week. The other is more general in its scope, and prohibits practically all labor in the District. It also prohibits games and shows of all kinds. The advocates of the bills directed their remarks particularly to the first bill.

A hearing was held on both these bills by the Senate Committee during the week. The bills were favored both by F. B. Sands and Mr. Gibbs, representing the Retail Grocers' Association, and by representatives of labor unions.

At the hearing Mr. Sands outlined the history of the attempts to get through Congress a law for Sunday observance in the District, and made a strong plea for the butchers and grocerymen, who are now compelled to work seven days in the week because there is no Sunday law. He said that the argument that such closing of meat stores would be a hardship to the poor who had no place to keep meats had been nullified by the provision in the bill which says that from June 1st to October 1st such shops may keep open till 10 o'clock Sunday morning for the purpose of delivering meats which have been purchased Saturday.

The bill was opposed only by the Seventh Day Adventists.

Even Calcutta Demands Pure Food Now.

Consul-General William H. Michael, of Calcutta, writes as follows in regard to official pure food requirements in the metropolis of India:—

> Calcutta demands pure butter, ghee and milk. The health officer has recommended to the market special committee that no substitute for pure butter or pure ghee (clarified butter) should be permitted to be sold in the new market, and that stall holders for these commodities would render themselves liable to lose their stalls if any materials other than pure butter and pure ghee were sold by them. As regards the sale of adulterated milk, it is proposed that any vendor in the new market who was convicted of selling adulterated milk should be ejected. The markets committee adopted both proposals of the health officer.

Johnson's Eversharp Slicing Machine

All the latest up-to-date improvements. Fully protected by four recent United States patents

Five little sharp pointed toothed wheels, located in the throat of the machine, all rotating on one shaft. They hold the meat firmly, close up to the knife, and cause the meat to be fed evenly, top and bottom alike. They act as a back bone to soft, moist, yielding meat, and insure slices of uniform thinness, no slabs or wedges cut to offend customers. THIS VALUABLE FEATURE IS PATENTED—NO OTHER MACHINE HAS IT.

Two circular tracks, finished up absolutely true and three hardened steel rollers ground perfectly round, gliding over these polished tracks with a smooth, easy, frictionless motion. These tracks and rollers prevent the knife edge from touching the iron face of the machine—absolutely nothing to dull the knife except the meat it. slices. OUR PATENTS COVER THIS IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENT—NO OTHER MACHINE HAS IT.

A fluted-faced meat clamp that holds the soft meat rigid and firm while being sliced. It holds the butt end of a big knuckle, or it holds a little half-ounce end, and it holds them right—no slipping or getting away. A PATENTED FEATURE THAT NO OTHER MACHINE HAS.

Two ball-jointed claws—these claws connect the meat with the feed mechanism; they grasp, hold and feed meat of any kind and every size and shape—they will feed a tiny scrap close up to the knife. This patented feature alone is worth five times the cost of the machine. It will save two dollars' worth of meat that always went to waste on every hundred pounds you bought. NO OTHER MACHINE HAS THIS PATENTED FEATURE.

Our patented sharpening device uses a razor hone of the very finest quality and our patented guide and gauge enables any unskilled clerk to produce a keen, smooth razor-like edge in less than a minute's time. Any one can sharpen this machine right, and no one need be troubled with a dull-edge knife. You can slice tons of beef, and your knife will still be sharp. NO OTHER MACHINE HAS SUCH A COMPLETE AND PERFECT SHARPENING DEVICE AS THIS ONE.

Our knives are made in our own works of the finest English steel, manufactured and imported to our order. They are heated to a nicety in a patented non-oxydizing gas furnace, and hardened in oil by an experienced expert, tempered to an exactness by a thermometer, ground concave by special process and fitted to a special patented hollow-ground bed, with a cutting-edge hard, tough and smooth, though they cost three times as much as ordinary knives, yet their superb action justifies the extra expense.

The EVERSHARP machines have the most complete and perfect feed-motion—an arrangement so perfectly simple, it is simply perfect. A large knuckle of beef, firmly grasped by the small end, is fed eighty slices to the inch until five hundred and sixty perfect slices are cut off, without once stopping the machine. NO OTHER MACHINE CAN CUT HALF THIS NUMBER OF SLICES WITHOUT STOPPING THE MACHINE AND READJUSTING THE MEAT.

We sell these machines for forty-six dollars, on monthly payments, and allow a liberal discount for all cash. Inquiries solicited. Facts and figures furnished.

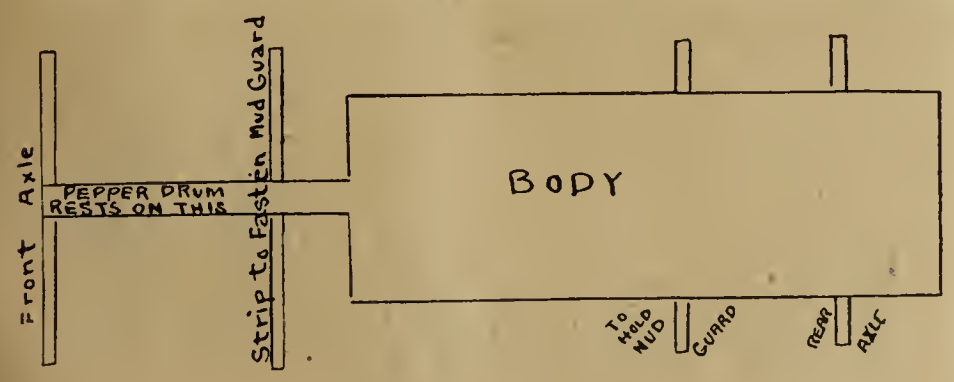
Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

"Auto" Window for Grocers.

At first glance this design does not look practical, but in reality is very easily made, although it requires a little time and patience. The first thing to make is a board platform (see diagram) for the floor with a narrow board extending forward the length of the heighth of a pepper drum. Under the front end nail a strip of wood across for the axle, also one across under the body not quite to the end.

Two other strips are nailed across to the ends of which are fastened the mud-guards.



Next make your "wheels." The tire is made of a coil of clothes-line around which is wrapped a heavy cord. This holds the coil together and gives the appearance of chains. In making the coils it is best to make them around the end of a bucket or a small keg or something so that all the wheels will be the same size.

Inside the "tire" is fastened a wooden lid off a mince-meat bucket or something similar. Fasten the wheels to the "axles" by driving nails through the centre of the lid. Next make your "hubs" and "spokes." These can be made of package goods or dried fruits. With fruit use a red apple for a hub and tack on silver prunes or peaches for "spokes" and "rims."

An empty pasteboard pepper drum is used for the "hood." Place this on its side (with the label toward the public) and nail to the board underneath. On top of the "hood" on the front end place a small flat box (stove polish).

The "body" is made of cakes of soap. It is better to use one brand of soap. The "dashboard" is built up square, with a single thickness of soap.

The "running board" and front "mud-guard" are made of box lumber and the rear guard is made out of a side of a cheese box. These are all nailed together and held in place by the strips running under the "bed." These can be left bare or painted, or they can be given a coat of glue and covered with loose coffee.

The "tool box" is a box of shredded wheat or something similar in size. The "steering wheel" is a lid off a mince-meat bucket. The "steering post" a broom handle fastened in the end of the pepper drum. An extra "tire" is carried on the "running board." The "rear lamp" is a small lantern hung on a clothes pin placed between the cakes of soap. Grocers selling tin cuspidors can use a couple for "search lights" by fastening the bottom sides to the ends of the "mud-guards" or pepper drum.

The figure can be either a large doll or can be made up. For each leg sew together two empty flour sacks and stuff them. Set a pair of shoes under the ends. Use a bag of flour for "body," a can of something for "neck" and a head of cabbage for "head." Make face out by pining on red peppers or dried fruit; in corn season, corn silk can be used for "hair." The arm is a piece of bologna (stuffed in skins).

In the front part of the window place a sign: "We Hold the Record for Low Prices."

The floor of the window is covered with sand.

A Soap Display.

Not long since I had what to me seemed far less artistic than some other displays I had had. It was anything but pretty. It was, however, a catchy window.

I had a large pile of a certain brand of soap in my cellar which I decided to unload quickly. Some of this soap I put into the window, which measures 60 x 40 inches, in the form of a two-story brick house. The soap was laid as a bricklayer would lay his bricks, flatwise, binding them together. On the first floor I left two openings on each of the two sides of the house for windows, while on the front I left a door in the centre and a window on each side of it. On the second floor I left two windows on each side of the house and three on the front. The rear of the house was left open, not being seen from the street. A second floor from the sides of orange boxes was put in for the purpose of binding the two walls, while the pointed roof was also made from the same material, covered with red crepe paper and crowned with two bars of soap for a chimney. Window shades of red crepe paper and lace curtains from confectionery boxes and the building was finished.

A walk from the "front gate" to the front door and around both sides of the house to the rear was left bare, but the rest of the floor of the window was covered with cork from Malaga grapes. The "yard" was decorated with plants from my wife's window garden. On the front of the house I put a card of proportionate size reading: "For Sale, apply at 125 N. Front St.," while overhead I hung a card reading: "This property for sale, price 5 cents a brick." In the evening I lit up the house with a small oil lamp.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

The last of that pile of soap is on the shelf now, which fact removes all doubt as to whether the display was a success.

Absorbine Stops Lameness.

Mr. Sherman Tanner, Lowman, N. Y., writes under date of March 27, 1908: "Two wecks ago I got my mule in the snow drifts and she either wrenched or strained her leg and it puffed up badly and lame, well, she could travel about as well on three legs. Last Monday I went to Elmira and went into 'Colvin's' and got a bottle of Absorbine. I started home at four o'clock and it was nine o'clock when I got home (ten miles), and a lamer animal you never saw.

"Well, the next morning I went at her. She would not stand on it at all, she would just hop over in the stall. I did not reduce the Absorbine, but put it on full strength. I kept it wet and rubbed it in for three days. This morning I hitched them up and drew a load of hay and wood and you would not know that she was ever lame. To say that I was a tickled chap wouldn't be saying anything. And the fun of it is how it can do the biz without taking the hair off or making it the least mite sore. My neighbor asked me about her and I told him what I had done and he said he would go there and get him a bottle. I have not used one-quarter of my bottle.

Well, I will close, wishing you success and that you are sure of. If you can sell one bottle of Absorbine in every locality, it is all the advertising you need."

Absorbine stops lameness, kills pain, removes bog spavins, thoroughpins, splints, wind puffs, shoc boils, enlarged glands and similar bunches in a mild and pleasant manner. $2.00 per bottle at all druggists or delivered express prepaid upon receipt of price. Information Wanted.

Pittsburg, Pa., April 14, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Will you kindly request the secretaries of other towns to write me stating what the retail grocers pay in their town for 5-cent loaves of bread, and how many ounces it weighs.

I have taken up the fight here to make all live up to the law and sell 16-ounce loaves of bread.

Yours truly,

JOS. C. KANE,

Secretary Merchants' Protective Association.

Who Wants Hominy?

Decatur, Ill., April 15, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—We notice in the "American Miller" of April 1st your article which states that it is and has been difficult to secure good table hominy this season. We are located here in the middle of the corn belt, and have just erected and started a 10,000-bushel per day hominy mill.

We are inclosing a stamped envelope for reply, and if you can do so will you please furnish us with the names of any of the dealers who would likely be interested in this table hominy? We are making a specialty of same.

Thanking you for any information you may be able to give us, we are, Yours truly,

Oatmeal Pioneer Dead.

Ferdinand Schumacher, known as the "Oatmeal King of America," from having founded the breakfast food business in this country, died unexpectedly at his home in Akron, Ohio, during the week. He was 82 years old on March 30 last. He retired from business some years ago after having disposed of his large interests to the American Cereal Company, now the Quaker Oats Company. He came to America from Hanover, Germany, in 1850 and settled on a farm near Cleveland, but later embarked in the grocery trade, and in 1856 he began the manufacture of oatmeal in this city on a small scale. The business grew until several large mills were erected and later were destroyed by fire.

Florida peppers in 6-basket carriers range from $1.75 to $2 per crate. The demand is good.

Toledo, Ohio.

The Toledo (Ohio) Retail Grocers' Association recently appointed a committee to make recommendations regarding the weight of canned tomatoes. The committee recommends as follows:—

In standard tins known as No. 3, we would recommend that contents be packed therein, to make the gross weight of each can weigh two and ten-sixteenths pounds.

Of the above contents based on the tomato, consisting of six-tenths water, we would recommend that said contents be three-tenths of said water and seven-tenths solid.

The committee also recommended that the manufacturer use caution in using green part. of the tomato in packing.

Florida eggplants range from $2.50 to $3.50 per crate and are in excellent demand.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

STOCK TAKING

Takes place June 1st. We want a general cleaning up of odds and ends. Loose packages of different cereals; jars of odd brands of syrup and molasses; bottles of different brands of sauce and pickles; glasses of jelly and jams; all must be sold at some price. The stock man has been instructed to get these all together, and it's up to you to get rid of them in the next few weeks.

VEGETABLES AT WHOLESALE.

A new wholesale list of fresh fruits and vegetables will be made out daily by the buyer and hung up back of the vegetable cashier's desk. Oranges, grapefruit and lemons by the box. New potatoes and spinach by the barrel. Sweet potatoes and lettuce by the hamper. Eggplant, cucumbers, Spanish onions, etc., by the crate. Our hotel and boarding house trade is increasing. We buy these goods as low as the jobbers, as our buyer is on the New York and Philadelphia markets throughout the week. Prices will build up a bigger wholesale truck business than we have heretofore commanded. Consult this new list every morning.

THE BOOK AGENT,

As well as other "smart fellows" that attempt to take your time and attention, must be turned down. Don't wait for the floor walker to do this. Tell the man that has a scheme or a "confidential bargain" that it's against the rules of the house to talk that kind of business in business hours.

MEAT PRICES FOR THE TELEPHONE.

From now on a new typewritten list of meat prices will be prepared daily. Formerly we have confined this list to our telephone operator; now it will be at every department, so you can talk fresh meats with confidence, having the entire list before you properly classified.

OUT OF GOODS.

We simply must not be out of anything that's standard and a regular seller. If the stock man neglects his duty to this extent, that is no excuse for you not taking orders for the article or not reporting it immediately to the manager through the floor walker. For two hours last Saturday Star Milk was refused. Such a condition must not again happen, even if we have to buy a case or two at retail.

COMMISSIONS FOR THE WEEK.

"Our Brand" June peas, 12 cents: 1 cent a can commission.

"Our Brand" succotash, 12 cents; 1 cent a can commission.

Gallon cans spinach, 40 cents; 3 cents a can commission.

Barrel "Our Brand" flour, $6.50; 25 cents a barrel commission.

Nemo toilet paper, 10 cents; 1 cent a roll commission.

Chocolate chips, 25 cents; 3 cents a pound commission.

The usual commission on teas and coffees, as well as flavoring extracts.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

EVERY ONE A GOOD CHANCE.

No. 313.—In heart of Philadelphia's most aristocratic residential district. Store 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, half cash, balance monthly. The people who buy at this store are the promptest payers in the city. Stock $2,000-$3,000, net profits 20 per cent., owing to the fact that customers are mostly wealthy. Owner going to the country and will sell at inventory. This store is a little old-fashioned in some respects, but is thoroughly prosperous and can be very greatly increased.

No. 324.—In North Philadelphia, store 16x42 feet. Does $300 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock $750. Uses one team. Clear net profits 12 per cent. Good house connected, for sale or rent. Owner retiring from business. Price inventory.

No. 326.—In West Philadelphia, store 17x32 feet. Does $350 to $450 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Stock $400 to $500. One team. Good house connected. Net profits 15 per cent. Owner retiring from grocery business, and will sell at inventory. This store has been established 20 years, and is solidly prosperous.

No. 329.—In Germantown, Philadelphia. Does $300 weekly, all cash. Stock about $1,000. No team. Nets clear 10 per cent. This business sells only groceries. The meat department is rented to another dealer on profitable terms, which make advertiser's rent very low. Owner has other business which takes his time. Price inventory.

No. 333.—General store in Mifflin County, Pa. An extremely strong proposition. Size 30x100 feet. Business about $4,000 per month, 40 per cent. cash. Stock $6,000, which can be reduced considerably. Uses two teams. Business thoroughly profitable, netting about $5,000 per year. Owner in poor health and wants to retire to country place. Will make very favorable terms. Low price for fixtures. Stock at inventory, with proper allowance for everything not strictly up to the mark. The business can be very decidedly increased.

No. 334—In West Philadelphia, size 16x44. Does $375 weekly, three-fourths cash. Stock $1500 but can be reduced to $1000. Clear slightly more than 10 per cent. above everything. Dwelling connected for sale or rent. Owner going into manufacturing and will sell at inventory. Fullest investigation.

No. 336.—On best business street of West Philadelphia. Store 16x27 feet. Does $150 to $200 weekly, all cash. Stock about $700. No team delivery. Clears 20 per cent. as expenses are low. Good dwelling connected for sale or rent. Good reasons which will be fully explained. Price inventory.

No. 341.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and delicatessen. Size 20x30 feet. Does $300 weekly. All cash. Stock $2,000, but can be reduced to $1,300. Push cart delivery. Net profits, 15 per cent., as family run store. Established 12 years. Owner must sell as death compels him to assume another business. Price inventory. Fixtures will run about $1,500, but can be reduced to $1,100. Amount required, around $3,000. Cash or good security. Dwelling.

No. 345.—In West Philadelphia. Meats and provisions. Size 15x28 feet. Does about $11,000, three-fourths cash. Mostly sells meats, so stock only averages $250 No team. Actual net profits, 20 per cent. Owner wishes to change business, for reasons which will be explained. Price inventory. Take around $800. Dwelling.

No. 346.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats, provisions. Size, 16 x 30. Does $200 to $250 weekly, three-quarters cash, balance weekly. Stock about $500. Push cart delivery. Net profits 12 per cent. Low rent and expenses. Satisfactory reasons for selling. Price inventory. For stock and fixtures about $1,200 required. This is an extremely strong small proposition.

No. 347.—In high class part of West Philadelphia. Meats, provisions, canned goods, etc. Size, 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, all cash Stock $300 to $350. One team. Clear net profits 15 per cent. Rent, $30 monthly. Pay roll, $21 weekly. No real estate. Owner wants to get in other business and will sell at inventory. Cost about about $1,000, without team.

No. 351.—In southern Philadelphia. Tea, coffee and groceries. Size, 17 x 40 feet. Does $16,000 yearly, all cash. Splendid transient trade—3,000 people pass the store every two days. Stock only about $100 Net profits, 12½ per cent. Owner has trouble with help and wants to retire. Fine place for man and wife. Price asked, complete, about $700, including fine National cash register.

No. 353.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and provisions. Size, 16 x 30 feet. Does $14,000 yearly, two-thirds cash. Dwelling connected. Stock, $1,000 to $1,500. No team. Net profits, 10 per cent. Owner wants to go further into suburbs and will sell at inventory or lump sum of $1,500. Splendid chance for adding meats.

No. 356.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 36 feet. Does $400 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Dwelling connected, if wanted. Stock about $800. Uses one team. Nets clear 10 per cent. Owner needs a rest and his eyesight is failing. Will sell at inventory. Will take about $1,000.

No. 360.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 17 x 30 feet. Does $400 to $500 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock, $600. Owner takes out $40 weekly, beside living expenses. Uses one team. Good dwelling attached. Owner is going into the saloon business and will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,000. This is a splendid money-making proposition.

No. 362.—Near Tioga, Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 20 x 30 feet. Does $125 weekly, half cash. Stock, $1,000. Clean net profits, 15 per cent. Dwelling connected for sale. Owner has Government position and cannot give attention. Will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,500. Full investigation.

In all of these the cause of selling is good, and the fullest investigation courted. Every one paying.

Good Fruit Attracts Trade

There is just one place in Philadelphia to get every thing in the fruit line as fine as it grows, at the right price.

If you want to attract trade to your store put handsome fruit where it can be seen.

The Greatest Fly Catcher Ever Invented

FLY RIBBON has gone through several successful seasons. Sells at sight.

FLY RIBBON has all the advantages, and none of the disadvantages of the ordinary fly paper. Catches mosquitoes as well, and frees the house of the disease-carrying insects.

FLY RIBBON does not drip. Is neat, clean and economical. Retails at 5 cents.

CATERPILLAR GLUE for the protection of ornamental and fruit trees, keeps moist for several months.

MANURENE—The Magic Plant Fertilizer.

Address Dept. D. for samples, circulars, testimonials and prices. On account of the big demand, place your order at once.

Fix=tures That Sell Goods

Store Fixtures are not inaminate things, that is, they ought not to be—they have a real selling ability. Take this 5-jar fixture for pickles, olives or anything that will go in a jar. Comes either in oak or cherry, nickel trimmings. Finely made and handsome.

Convenient, sightly and a real help in the sale of goods. Surprisingly moderate in price.

Backwards and Forwards

You grocers know the ups and downs of the breakfast food business. You know how dozens and dozens of products have come on the market, filled your shelves and stayed there. Could we possibly point to a more convincing argument in favor of the quality of Egg-O-See and E-C Corn than the fact that the sales of both are constantly growing.

Hold It to the Light

La Toscana is an olive oil to hold to the light and marvel over. So rich, so mellow, so golden!

The finest of virgin pure Italian olive oil. Plenty of oil as pure, little or none as rich and unctuous. French and Spanish oil are good enough in their way, but there is no olive oil anywhere like the Italian.

La Toscana oil would look fine on your shelves.

Bought Simply. Because She Liked the Glass Package

It's odd what little things make sales sometimes. A grocer told us the other day that the day before a woman had bought a jar of Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa simply because she liked the novelty of the glass package. She didn't ask any questions about the peculiar characteristics of the cocoa; she liked the glass jar and bought.

There is a point in that for grocers who study the public—the useful novelty is usually the seller.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa, the only cocoa packed in glass, has a smoother flavor than any other cocoa made. That is because our exclusive process of making takes out certain substances that other manufacturers leave in.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

A Household Word

If you were to say to any woman who came into your store, "What is Ariosa?" She would answer instantly, "Why that's Arbuckles' Coffee." Why? There is only ONE answer. It is the best package coffee ever sold at the price, and it is the most extensively advertised. Ariosa is a product you don't have to sell, you simply put it in stock and take orders for it.

ARBUCKLE BROTHERS NEW YORK

Do You Want YOUR Customers to Get the Best

Kidney Beans have never sold the way they ought to sell, and the only reason is that they haven't been put up in a way that made people want more.

If you will open a can of our Kidney Beans and let your customers see the way they look, as WE prepare them with our automatic cooker, you'll sell a can to every customer you have.

The STEEL FRUIT JAR CAP from the Chemist's Viewpoint

Prof. Chas. T. P. Fennel, the famous Cincinnati chemist, says that a steel fruit jar cap submitted to the influence of organic acids, such as are contained in fruits, do not corrode as much as zinc caps. He further says that resulting salts from this corrosion in the case of the steel cap are absolutely harmless, and that those from the zinc caps are poisonous to the human system.

If you tell this to your customers you can sell a lot of our steel caps.

Give Me Some Fresh Roasted Peanuts

You know that most everybody eats peanuts, and they all want them freshly roasted, but you may not know that they pay you 300 per cent. profit when they are roasted in an

the simplest and most inexpensive automatic roaster made. There is practically no labor and no expense in operating one, any boy can do it, as there is nothing to get out of order and nothing to break. It will pay for itself in a month's time. Send for full particulars and price to

When the Jobber's Salesman Comes

When your jobber's salesman comes to you with future canned goods for 1908, ask him, in your own protection, if he will guarantee you 100 per cent. delivery. If he won't, then order Blue Bell or Clover Farm canned goods, for you can get 100 per cent. delivery on those.

No finer goods packed in all Maryland. Splendid quality, and a business-like contract giving you not what the packer wants to give you, but all you bought.

YOUR DUTY IS TO TELL HER

Suppose your customer does ask for Trust Starch, is it your duty to give it to her without telling her that Murdoch's Corn or Laundry Starch is better?

Don't you owe it to her to give her the very best—to tell her if she thinks she is getting the best when she isn't?

Murdoch's Corn and Laundry Starches are the finest products of their class extant. We go to trouble in making them perfect, which other manufacturers tell us is ridiculous.

But that's the kind of a foundation we're laying for this business.

What Rennet Must Do to Be Good

Good rennet has gotten to be one of the most staple dessert specialties that a grocer can sell.

If it is good. To be good, it must coagulate milk in a few minutes and it must not spoil. James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet fills these requirements under a double-barreled guarantee. And besides that, it has the flavor—the clean, delicate, penetrating flavor that makes rennet-eating grow into a habit.

As to profit, $3.00 return on a $1.50 investment is good enough, eh?

They Wouldn't Imitate It If It Wasn't So Good

The Ramly Cigarette is the finest 10c. Turkish cigarette ever made. It is so good other manufacturers try to make their goods look like the Ramly, but there the similarity ends.

If you want to get a run on cigarettes, get people to go out of their way to come to to you, put in the Ramly. Remember how it is spelled—R-A-M-L-Y.

The Only Secret to Good Bacon

THERE is nothing magical about bacon. Any packer with the proper facilities and a real desire to make goods he'll be proud of, can produce it.

First, the right kind of selected raw material; then, careful, delicate curing; and you have good bacon—you're sure to have. That's all we put into Swift's Premium Bacon. Why, then, isn't all bacon as good as Swift's? Because one or both of those two elements are lacking either all or some of the time.

We will kill the Premium brand before we let the grade drop one iota. You can tell your trade that the third, or the fourth, or the tenth shipment will be exactly the same as to-day's.

REGARDLESS

of your requirements we want your coupon book business. Makes no difference whether you want few or many. We are greatly pleased with the large number of new people, who in 1907, began using our

and have apparently settled down to their continuous use. The convenience of the INDEX appeals to them.

100,000 MORE BOOKS SOLD IN 1907 THAN 1906

Write for free samples and then send in an order. They do not cost much and after you learn their merits you will be glad to use them through 1908 and as much longer as you are in business.

PAYING THE DUTY

¶ If your customer demands an imported ginger ale, it is simply from ignorance that a brand just as good is made here—Clicquot Club. The man who pays the price of an imported ale is paying not for extra quality, but for the duty. Compared with Clicquot Club there is no extra quality to pay for.

¶ Clicquot Club is made in Massachusetts by experts. The factory is spotless and the materials the best money can buy. Clicquot Club is the most widely sold brand of ginger ale in the world. You can sell it steadily all the year round.

U. S. GOVERNMENT INSPECTION OF ALL OUR GOODS.

Be Proud of Your Olive Oil

You may remember the recent tests which the United States Government made into all brands of imported olive oil.

Those tests (Government Bulletin 77, page 55) proved Nicelle Olive Oil to be superior to all the other brands tested. Nicelle Oil is made and bottled in Nice, France. It is the highest type of pure olive oil producible.

Sell olive oil you can be proud of. There are so many brands you can't.

Could You Make a Living Then?

Suppose you sold nothing but bulk sugar, could you make a living?

No, you couldn't; and the chance is the more you sold, the further away from a living you'd be.

When you count the work of handling sugar, and the cost of the work, and add to that the loss every grocer makes through "good measure," you'll find you're practically making nothing on sugar at all.

But you could make a living on Franklin Carton Sugar alone. Every package pays a clean-cut profit—not eaten up either by too much work or overweight. As a business proposition it's five times as good as bulk sugar can be at its very best.

Clean, sanitary cartons that preserve strength and freshness. Two-pound cartons and 2, 5, 10, 25, 50 and 100-pound cotton bags : : :

Old Fashioned Gelatine

The cleanest gelatine in the world now comes to you, Mr. Grocer, packed with Universal Coupons.

For purity of stock and scrupulous cleanliness of manipulation Chalmers' Gelatine has no equal anywhere.

Nothing but the finest calves' stock and the clearest spring water. The result is real rich old-fashioned gelatine, as far removed from the nauseous imitations of it as wheat is removed from chaff.

The average consumer has been fed on imitation gelatine so long that he will turn with immense relief to Chalmers'—if you'll let him.

Two styles—granulated and shredded.

No Loss on Loose Goods

¶ Don't have goods loose and let dirt, bugs and hungry customers eat up half your profits. A store like this saves time hunting for goods that ought to be in sight at all times, pleases customers and disappoints the poor little bugs. Our catalogue shows other stores we have fitted up. Send for it.

Don't Buy a Cheap Wagon

If you do, you'll remember this advice. A cheap wagon looks nearly as well in the factory as our "J. M.," but oh, what a difference in six months!

The "J. M." wagon is the best delivery wagon made. Only the finest materials go into it, and they're put together right, too.

If we haven't what you want, though we probably have, we'll build it for you.

What Team Would Do This?

Automobiles are different from what they used to be in two respects—1. They don't break down like they used to; and 2. They have been so simplified that any average person can run them.

No man need fear an automobile will betray him into a lot of expense. The Lindsley Car will actually save him expense. As a delivery proposition it beats a team at least three times. What team will carry 1,500 pounds thirty miles at the cost of a gallon of gasoline?

The Lindsley Car will do that.

DOLLARS IN RETAILERS' POCKETS

Hundreds of Manufacturers and Jobbers of High-grade Standard Selling Goods are offering

UNIVERSAL COUPON CERTIFICATES TO RETAIL DEALERS

as an inducement to push the sales of their goods to consumers. These certificates are given at no increase in the selling prices, or cheapening of quality in their products, but are intended solely as a compensation for your assistance, and are exchangeable through us for valuable and useful merchandise, of which the following list represents a few of the

1000 ARTICLES TO CHOOSE FROM

Pianos	Harness	Buggies	Silverware	Typewriters	Scales	Lamps
Coffee Mills	Safes	Leather Goods	Strong Boxes	Wagons	Trucks
Desks	Tools	Chinaware	Jewelry	Furniture	Sporting Goods
Rubber Goods	Watches	Cut Glass	Toilet Articles	Trunks	Rugs	Clocks

Any retailer taking advantage of this liberal offer is simply putting extra dollars into his pocket, as the cost to him is absolutely nothing but represents a saving of 15 to 60 per cent. over the cost if he were to buy them in the regular retail way.

No Argument Against Facts

Success in merchandising is a result of close attention to the little things and the application of methods which have been proven efficient by actual experience.

If your present system is subject to losses by errors in computation or the giving of overweight, remember that it is your money and your merchandise that is getting away from you.

We offer you our services gratis for the purpose of showing you where the losses occur, and how they can be successfully prevented.

It's a Hard Job, but We've Done It

You know how hard it is to please all your customers with coffee. It is natural for you to find it harder than we do, because you have a lot of things to do and we do nothing else. Private Estate Coffee is the result of many years' experimenting to please the popular taste, and it does it so well that we don't know of a grocer who has induced a customer to try it who isn't still using it. This is one important reason for your making a leader of it, and another is that we share our profits with you by giving you Universal Coupons with every case.

THE FULTON MILLS 33-34 Fulton Street, New York

Philadelphia Branch, 139 S. Front Street

You Know What Our Name On These Goods Means

We are making Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels. We are making them like we make our bread, so good that nothing can be better. So good that grocers can safely recommend them to their customers.

We are going to spend our advertising appropriation on the grocer, to make it worth his while to tell his customers about these goods and create a demand for them.

Every case will contain Universal Coupons, which the grocer can exchange for almost anything he needs instead of buying it.

We Want You to Sell This

There are good reasons why you should. It is the finest floor wax ever manufactured. Lots of your customers have hardwood floors, and if you sell Moore's Floor Wax to them ONCE they will always buy it. To make it worth your while to tell your trade about it, we are giving you enough Universal Coupons with it to entitle you to a handsome premium with every case.

'Neath Sunny Italian Skies

If you have been handling French or Spanish olive oil, you probably do not really know genuine olive oil perfection.

The finest of all olive oil is Italian oil; other oils are just as pure, but none have the smooth, mellow richness of oil made from olives grown 'neath sunny Italian skies.

The finest oil that comes to this country is La Toscana. There is a flavor and a perfume to this oil that connoisseurs say they have never seen equalled.

THE ONLY WAY WE HAD A CHANCE

We have been endeavoring, through trade paper advertising, to induce you to ask for Murdoch's Laundry and Corn Starch. Many of you have done so, and are selling them regularly to-day.

We hazard the opinion that every grocer who is, is well satisfied that they are the cleanest and the best starches on the market.

They have to be the best, for that is absolutely the only ground on which they could sell. With the market dominated by one concern, what chance would an independent starch have unless it was better than its competitors?

So that there are two reasons why you ought to sell these starches. First—they are independent, Second—they are the best.

Oswego Maize Products Company, Oswego, New York

There's Enough FOR YOUR Customers

If all people knew what "Leaf" Lard means, we couldn't supply the demand for it.

There is but one piece of Leaf Fat in a hog—not enough to supply one-tenth of the people—most of the lard that's used must be made from other hog fats.

But you can sell your customers "Simon-pure Leaf Lard.

If you are after Quality trade, better stock "Simon-pure" to-day.

ARMOUR AND COMPANY

Isn't It Foolish To Advertise Light?

It seems ridiculous to advertise light, so obvious is it that that which is lightest is cheerfulest and draws the most people.

Particularly a store. Every successful grocer in business uses an amount of light that you might consider extravagant; but it isn't—it is business. These grocers make their stores cheerful because they know that cheeriness brings people, and people buy.

You'll find that the most successful stores are always the ones that are the brightest at night.

Talk this over with us.

More Evidence That Certain Jobbers Want Retailers' Association Destroyed*

In Line With Montgomery & Co's Move, Reported Last Week, Another Incident Is Related in Which Another Leading Jobber in the Local Conflict Refused to Sell Retail Grocers' Association Goods. Proves That Their Real Desire Is Not to Make Association Buy as a Retailer, But Not to Buy at All.

In the last issue of the "Grocery World" it was suggested, based on a move made by William Montgomery & Co., the local wholesale grocers, that many of the jobbers who are engaged in the attack upon the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association are not sincere in their contention that only jobbers should sell the association; and that what these jobbers really want is for nobody to sell the association. In other words, their aim is not to relegate the association to a place in the ranks of retailers, but to destroy it.

Further evidence showing that this accusation is not exaggerated was obtained during the week. The jobber implicated this time is not Montgomery & Co., but another concern no less prominent in the fight against the retail association.

The Retail Grocers' Association recently needed a certain brand of Maine corn. None being in sight, a well-known merchandise broker was employed to hunt some up. He found it in the possession of the jobbing house referred to above. This house, let it be said, has been steadfastly persisting for months that the Retail Grocers' Association, being composed of retailers, should buy all its goods from wholesale grocers, none at all from manufacturers.

The broker inquired the price of the corn and this being satisfactory placed an order before disclosing the buyer's name. When the sale was complete except as to this he said:—

"Charge to the Retail Grocers' Association."

"I don't know about that," instantly said the partner who was attending to the matter, "we don't want to sell them."

The broker couldn't see why and said so. He had considerable argument with the jobber and finally persuaded him that there could be no logical reason for a jobber refusing to sell an association of retailers. The order was finally accepted and sent back to be cared for by the bookkeeper.

As soon as he saw it the bookkeeper raised his hands in holy horror. He even had the assurance to take it out to his employer and question whether the house ought to sell the Retail Grocers' Association. The bookkeeper almost persuaded the jobber that the business should be refused, but not quite, and the transaction stood, until the other partner happened in. He raised a fearful time about it. He didn't think they ought to sell the Retail Grocers' Association anything.

At this juncture the broker lost his temper completely.

"————," he said, "you're a fool! You've been contending for weeks that only the jobbers ought to sell the association, but when they come to you, a jobber, you still raise objections! You're going directly against your own principles!"

"Well," said the jobber, finally, "we'll take the order, but we won't charge it to the Retail Grocers' Association; we'll charge it to you."

The "Grocery World" claims that nothing could be more significant than this, of the secret intention of a certain few narrow-minded and selfish jobbers to crush out the organized retailers if they can. Happily they cannot, but their impotence fails to make their motive less contemptible.

It is perfectly plain that if the sole desire of those wholesalers was to compel the Retailers' Association to buy of jobbers, that the one above referred to would have welcomed and applauded the association's effort to buy corn, not of the packer, but of him, a jobber. So would Montgomery & Co. have welcomed the association's purchase of ginger ale from a jobber instead of from the manufacturer direct.

*NOTE.—The name of the jobbing house referred to in the above article cannot be published, but it will be supplied to any retailer sufficiently interested to ask for it.—ED.

Philadelphia Retailers' Annual Banquet.

Local Association Holds Twenty-third Annual Function at Dooner's Hotel. Members Make Capable After Dinner Speakers. Frankford Grocer-Poet's Jubilee Song. Officers Receive Ovations. The Toasts.

The Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association held its twenty-third annual banquet at Dooner's Hotel, where with few exceptions every annual banquet has been held for years, on last Wednesday evening, April 22d. An even hundred men were present, the ladies this year not being included in the invitation.

After the discussion of the menu, which was exceedingly well chosen and satisfactory, the following toasts were responded to:—

"Reminiscences," Mr. O. A. Patterson; "The Rolling Dollar," Mr. J. A. Edgar; "Self Limitation," Mr. C. W. Zieber; "Business Unity," Mr. A. F. Daix, Jr.; "Competition," Mr. William Lehman Yerkes; "The Unit's Value," Mr. E. J. Buckley; "Enthusiasm," Mr. C. Y. Scully; "The Dynamo," Mr. Albert Kaiser; "Confidence," Mr. Lucian W. Beatty.

A change was made this year by having an unusually large number of after-dinner speakers chosen from among the association members. The experiment was a conspicuous success, the addresses being well prepared, practical, and in some cases far above the average after-dinner speech. William Smedley, secretary, was toastmaster, and in introducing President Albert Kaiser, the last speaker, paid him a tribute as the "balance wheel of the organization," which brought the brainy little president a remarkable ovation from the members.

The evening also brought a series of tributes to Secretary Smedley, who this year completes his twentieth year of service, and whose capacity and wisdom have been particularly marked through the present conflict with local jobbers.

Another feature of the evening was the rendering of the "Grocers' Jubilee Song," composed by R. T. Holme, of the Frankford Association, and sung to the tune of "Marching Through Georgia." Mr. Holme also rendered his original song "My Grandfather's Store," the words of which have been published in the "Grocery World." The words of the Jubilee Song are as follows:—

Listen while the grocers sing,
(This song is our delight)
It cheers us in the battle
We are fighting for the right—
A battle in which each of us
Should strive to take a part,
While we are banded together.

CHORUS.
Hurrah! Hurrah! the grocers all agree;
Hurrah! Hurrah! we still united be.
Thus we'll sing the chorus,
And we'll sing it heartily—
While we are banded together.

How we used to get took in
By those who wouldn't pay,
How we used to swear we'd never Trust another day,
How we used to watch and wait
For the cash that never came,
Before we were banded together.

The dead beat used to be the boss,
And when we'd want our pay,
They'd get mad and tell us
They could deal across the way.
But now we've got 'em where we want 'em,
And there they'll have to stay,
While we are banded together.

A better day is coming, boys,
It seems just now at hand,
When we as grocers know our rights,
And boldly take a stand
Against the wrongs we suffer,
Both within and out our ranks,
While we are banded together.

Strawberries continue cheap. Florida berries are about done. There are a few in from Charleston, but the bulk of the supply is from North Carolina, and command, if they are good, 15 cents. Last year at this time the quotation was 25 cents. Present receipts of strawberries are not running very good.

Invitation

To the Members of The National Association Retail Grocers.

Gentlemen:

As your Annual Convention meets in the city of Boston May 11-12-13-14, we take this opportunity to cordially Invite You and your Family and Friends to come to our Boston offices at that time.

We shall be pleased to show you such attention as you will permit; and, incidentally, request the pleasure of your inspection of our coffee and spice factory, which comprehends many very interesting features.

We are, as perchance you are aware, Pioneers in the manufacture and distribution of Pure High-grade Coffees, Spices, and Teas, and will take great pride in showing you our splendid equipment and the perfect sanitary conditions under which we store, manufacture, and pack our products.

We are located only Four Minutes' Walk from the great South Terminal Station, through which you will probably enter the city.

Have your Mail sent in our care, and command us for any assistance in making your visit here pleasant and profitable.

Cordially yours,

Dwinell-Wright Company,

Dr. Wiley Under Cross-Examination

How the Chief Government Chemist Showed Up as a Scientist When Questioned in the Harper Case. Can't Even Remember Title of His Own Book. Admits Ignorance on Several Points. Extracts from Stenographic Report of Examination.

Since the reversal by the Federal Food and Drug Board of several of the rulings of Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief Government chemist, on matters concerned with the enforcement of the Federal food law, a doubt has grown up among the trade as to Dr. Wiley's actual standing as a physiological chemist. Before he was put to the crucial test it was generally believed that Dr. Wiley was an extremely able scientist, but several reasons seem to have developed for modifying that impression.

The latest and possibly the strongest reason is certain admissions made by him during his testimony as an expert witness in the first and so far the only prosecution brought under the national food law. The case referred to was that against Robert N. Harper, a well-known business man of Washington, D. C., for selling a medicinal preparation under false label. For general information the following stenographic extracts from Dr. Wiley's testimony at that trial are reproduced:

Dr. Wilcy cross-examined by Mr. Tucker:—

Mr. Tucker: "Well, you have written a book, have you not, on—what is the title of your book, Doctor?"

Dr. Wilcy: "I cannot remember it."

Mr. Tucker: "You cannot remember the title of your book?"

Dr. Wiley: "No, sir."

Mr. Tucker: "Well, I will read the title to you—'Foods and Their Adulteration; Wilcy; Illustrated.'"

Dr. Wiley: "I think that is it; yes, sir."

Mr. Tucker: "You plead guilty of being the author of that?"

Dr. Wilcy: "Yes, sir."

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. Tucker: "What is the physiological effect of caffeine?"

Dr. Wiley: "Well, I am not an expert pharmacologist."

Mr. Tucker: "You do not know?"

Dr. Wiley: "I have an idea, but not as an expert."

Mr. Tucker: "Do I understand, then, that you disclaim any expert knowledge on the subject of the physiological effect of drugs?"

Dr. Wiley: "I do. I am not a druggist."

Mr. Tucker: "You do not know, then, the physiological effect of drugs?"

Dr. Wiley: "Yes; I know some of them, because I am a physician. I would not qualify as an expert in drugs."

Mr. Tucker: "Oh, you are a physician?"

Dr. Wiley: "I am trained as a physcian; yes, sir."

Mr. Tucker: "Have you ever practiced as a physician?"

Dr. Wiley: "I have never practiced, except in hospitals. I never had a private practice."

Mr. Tucker: "What has been the extent of your hospital experience?"

Dr. Wiley: "I will not qualify as a practicing physician; I do not propose to."

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. Tucker: "You have stated that this preparation of Dr. Harper's is not a brain food. That means, in your opinion, that it has no food value. Now, I understand that you are expressing that opinion, not as a physician, but as a chemist. Is that right?"

Dr. Wilcy: "As one with some knowledge of foods."

Mr. Tucker: "Then you are expressing that opinion as a food expert as distinguished from a physician?"

Dr. Wilcy: "Yes, sir."

Mr. Tucker: "And as a food expert you do not know the physiological effect of caffeine on the body?"

Dr. Wiley: "As a food expert I know it does not nourish the body."

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. Tucker: "Doctor, you have told us that you do not know anything about, or know little about, the physiological effects of drugs."

Dr. Wiley: "I said I would not qualify as an expert."

Mr. Tucker: "Yes."

Dr. Wiley: "I know a good deal about it, but not as an expert."

Mr. Tucker: "Well, as I understand, we are trying to get your opinion as an expert. That is what we have been endeavoring to do. Doctor, are you acquainted with the work of W. Gilman Thompson, Professor of Medicine in the Cornell University Medical College, entitled 'Practical Dietetics?'"

Dr. Wilcy: "I have never read it very carefully. I have seen the work."

Mr. Tucker: "Is it considered an authority?"

Dr. Wiley: "Well, I could not state in regard to that. So far as I know—I would not say positively—I should think it was a very good authority."

Mr. Tucker: "You do consider it a good authority?"

Dr. Wiley: "Well, I say, I have not read it with any care, except that I have consulted it once or twice; but I never have read the book, so I do not know it from my personal knowledge."

Mr. Tucker: "How does Dr. Thompson stand in the profession?"

Dr. Wiley: "I do not happen to know him personally, and I have never heard any expression——"

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. Tucker: "What is the chemical formula of acetanilid?" (An ingredient of the preparation on trial).

Dr. Wiley: "I do not remember the chemical formula. I am not a drug expert."

Mr. Tucker: "What are the elementary constituents of acetanilid?"

Dr. Wiley: "It consists of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen."

Mr. Tucker: "Anything else?"

Dr. Wiley: "Well, I could not say. I am not an expert in that line."

Mr. Tucker: "You are not an expert in that line?"

Dr. Wiley: "No, sir."

Mr. Tucker: "Are not some of these elements that you have just named also elements of food?"

Dr. Wiley: "Not to my knowledge."

Mr. Tucker: "None of them?"

Dr. Wiley: "Not to my knowledge."

Mr. Tucker: "What is the chemical formula of starch in food?"

Dr. Wiley: "Starch is composed of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen."

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. Tucker: "Now, Doctor, as I understand, you do not know the physiological effect of acetanilid, and yet you state as a food expert that it has no food value?"

Dr. Wiley: "I do."

Mr. Tucker: "How do you reconcile these two statements? If you do not knew the physiological effect of acetanilid, how can you say that it has no food value?"

Dr. Wiley: "Because it is not a food; it has none of the properties of foods."

Mr. Tucker: "Well, that is your opinion, that it is not a food; is it not?"

Dr. Wiley: "Well, yes."

Mr. Tucker: "How can you state that it is not a food if you do not know its physiological effect upon the human system?"

Dr. Wiley: "Well, I know it is not a food."

Mr. Tucker: "Well, is that the best answer you can give us?"

Dr. Wiley: "I think it is a very positive answer."

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. Tucker: "How long ago was it, Doctor, that you studied medicine?"

Dr. Wiley: "It has been thirty years ago."

Mr. Tucker: "Thirty years ago you studied medicine?"

Dr. Wiley: "I studied therapeutics; yes, sir."

Mr. Tucker: "How long did you practice?"

Dr. Wiley: "I never practiced at all, except during my experience in a hospital as a student, or as an assistant for a short time."

Mr. Tucker: "Then at least part of your knowledge of the physiological effect of caffeine is based upon what knowledge you obtained as a student in a hospital thirty years ago?"

Dr. Wiley: "Yes, sir?"

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. Tucker: "Did you not say, Doctor, that tannin is the chief, principal ingredient of coffee?"

Dr. Wiley: "I did not say it was the chief; I said it was one of the principal constituents."

Mr. Tucker: "Well, I only want to know why you make that statement, why is it; that is all?"

Dr. Wiley: "Well, I could not say why tannin is the chief constituent of coffee. I did not create coffee."

Mr. Tucker: "No, Doctor; that was not the question. The question is why it is so valuable?"

Dr. Wiley: "Well, I think you must refer that to the Creator, too."

Those persons who have believed Dr. Wiley to be a fount of knowledge on everything connected with chemistry, both food chemistry and chemistry in general, will doubtless be amazed at his miserable showing in the above examination.

Turks Want Our Soaps.

American Consul Says We Sell Very Little Soap in Turkey Now, but Could Sell Much More. France, England, Austria and Germany Have Trade Now.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
April 23, 1908.

According to E. H. Ozman, the American Consul stationed at Constantinople, Turkey, there is a good chance in the country of the Sultan for American soaps.

All laundry work in Turkey is done by the washerwoman, and in the most primitive manner. Hot water is always used, and from the moment the soap is put into the tub it never leaves it, always remaining in the hot water and never melting. It is difficult to get people in this country to change from what they have been accustomed to, although within recent years certain foreign soaps have gradually come into use. Native soap is made up in rectangular blocks weighing about 1¼ pounds each.

There is imported into Constantinople from Marseilles, France, 25 or 30 tons of white soap annually, made up in bars of 100, 150, 250, 500 and 1,000 grams (1,000 grams equal 2.2 pounds) and packed in cases. The qualities imported contain 50 to 70 per cent. of fat, and the price varies from 40 to 70 francs per 100 kilos ($7.72 to $13.51 per 220 pounds) free on board ship at Marseilles.

One brand of laundry soap has, by judicious advertising, taken a firm hold on the Turkish market. It can be used with cold water, and is beginning to be adopted where native soap held full sway. It is comparatively cheap, saves time, and is even used by some of the poorer classes for toilet purposes. This soap is made up in bars of two cakes joined, three bars in one box containing advertising matter in French and Turkish. One case is made up of 48 boxes and, notwithstanding local imitations, besides the competition of other soaps made up in a similar manner, its sales were not less than 7,000 cases during last year. It is retailed at 18 cents per box of three bars.

There are still possibilities for good laundry soap of similar quality in the hands of a pushing agent, but a little money would have to be spent in newspaper advertising and putting printed posters around the town.

Most of the higher-priced toilet soaps are imported from France. England has a good share with one popular make, and cheaper articles come from Austria and Germany. Our share is insignificant.

There is a large business to be done in cheap toilet soap. One firm alone is selling 500 dozens of toilet soap per month, put up in fancy boxes, containing 6 cakes each, which are sold for 20 cents. This line, however, is generally made up in boxes containing 3 cakes, and is retailed at about 12 cents per box. The Consul invites any American manufacturer who wishes to go after the Turkish field to correspond with him.

HOLT.

Collection Letter One Grocer Has Found Successful.

Following is a form of collection letter which has been adopted by L. F. Hellman, of Cleveland, Ohio, and which he claims has brought excellent results:—

Mr. .....

Dear Sir:—Looking over our accounts we find that you owe us. It is not a pleasure for us to ask you to make settlement, but conditions of the times prompt us to press payment on all accounts. In fact, we are pressing all customers to work close to cash payments. Wholesalers are hard pressed for money, not being able to make loans from the banks to carry on their business. They have organized and are demanding close settlements from all men in business. Commission merchants ask us to pay bills every Monday, even if the goods have been bought the previous Saturday. Flour men ask us to pay previous bills before sending out a fresh lot. Wholesale grocers are a little more lenient, giving us thirty days, 2 per cent. fifteen days.

This 2 per cent. is quite an item. It means an extra profit to us. For example: If you owed us $10 for one year and we lose this 2 per cent. every fifteen days, our not being able to use this money in our business means a loss to us of about 20 cents each fifteen days, 40 cents each month or $4.80 per year.

The total of your bill and the condition of your account cost us a pretty penny in lost discounts. The saving of this percentage almost pays our operating expenses, if figured on all outstanding moneys. A quick settlement at this time would be very much appreciated.

Respectfully,

Threatening Brokers, Now.

The local Wholesale Grocers' Association is still bringing considerable pressure to bear on merchandise brokers, threatening them with a boycott in case they continue to sell goods to the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association. Let it be said and emphasized that only a few jobbers descend to this. A large number, while plainly stating that they will do more for a broker who refuses the association than for a broker who does not, are still too much men to descend to the vain and childish threats of boycott that a few have made.

So far as the writer can learn, and he has investigated the matter carefully and with great impartiality, not a single broker has been influenced by these threats to cut off his relations with the Retail Grocers' Association. Some have admitted instantly that they intended to sell the association, and openly defied the jobbers to do what they liked. One broker who was threatened reminded the protesting jobber that he had never handled the broker's goods until compelled to, and then only in niggardly quantities, while the association had at once taken them up when their merit was proven and created a wide market.

Every one of the largest merchandise brokerage houses in Philadelphia sells the Retail Grocers' Association's goods, and so far as the pressure made by the jobbers up to date is concerned they will probably continue to do so.

Gimbel Brothers as Oleo Dealers.

The entrance into the oleo business of Gimbel Bros., proprietors by their own confession of the only good grocery store in Philadelphia, looks like a revelation of cheap instincts. Oleomargarine is not necessarily a disreputable product. There are certain sections of the United States, notably the coal regions of Pennsylvania, where it is sold honestly on its merits, and where its low price and perfect healthfulness have won it a large sale. Wherever there is a legitimate public demand for it, oleomargarine can be just as respectable as butter.

In Philadelphia, however, there is no public demand for oleomargarine. It has practically never been sold to local consumers for what it was; its sale has almost always meant fraud, for which reason the product can fairly be called, speaking of the attitude of Philadelphia consumers toward it, an illegitimate and unwanted product.

Would a grocer whose instincts were as superfine as Gimbel Bros. try to make the public believe theirs are, enter the oleo business under these conditions? Possibly, however, the Gimbels have found that the class of people who patronize their store prefer imitation to genuine; or at least prefer oleomargarine to Gimbel butter.

Distinguished for the Breaks They Have Made.

Both of the two most foolish moves made by the jobbers' contingent in the present attack upon the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association were made by William Montgomery & Co., the local jobbers. A member of this concern it was who circulated the lie that Secretary Smedley, of the association, was a perjurer, and who was afterward forced to eat his words without seasoning. Montgomery & Co. too were the heroes of the episode reported last week in which a manufacturer was forced in self-defense to sell the Retailers' Association because of Montgomery & Co's foolish attack upon a sale to the organization by a jobber.

The "Grocery World" has no quarrel with Montgomery & Co. personally. It feels like remarking to the Wholesale Grocers' Association, however, that in the present conflict it is already badly enough handicapped without being made ridiculous by the fat-witted didoes of the concern named. It would be the greatest thing that could happen to the Retail Grocers' Association to have Montgomery & Co. given free rein, but the "Grocery World" feels a sympathy with any warrior who goes to battle with a millstone about his neck.

Quibbles.

The writer has discussed with many wholesale grocers the question why a carload buyer, whether jobber, retailer or consumer, should not buy direct of the producer, but has never found one who had even the semblance of a logical argument against it. Indeed it is usually difficult to confine jobbers to the real point of the controversy at all. Realizing that the logic of the situation is all against them, they almost invariably seek to confuse the issue by wandering off on tangents.

Take the article on "Direct Sales by Manufacturer to Retailer an Injustice," by a New York jobber, which is reproduced in another column. Mr. Wellington, the writer, either hopelessly misunderstands the issue, or, like many another jobber, deliberately avoids it. Very plausibly he argues how unfair it is for the retailer to deny the jobber a proper profit. Certainly it is, but what of it? Nobody is trying to do that, Mr. Wellington. Everybody agrees that not only the jobber, but every other merchant, has the right to a reasonable return on everything he sells.

Then comes an argument to show the impossibility of the manufacturer selling direct to the retailer in the small town. That is equally beside the question. Who wants the manufacturer to sell the retailer in the small town? At least, unless he can buy the quantity?

Really, this is about all there is to the article. The rest of it follows the same line—that the manufacturer cannot sell the small retailer; that the jobber is indispensable to most retailers; and so on.

All of which is cheerfully conceded. The point, however, has nothing to do with these quibbles. The question is this, Mr. Wellington: Is it fair to permit one man, who calls himself a jobber, to buy 100 cases direct from the producer, while compelling another 100-case buyer, because he is a retailer, to buy through some one else, and pay an extra profit?

What have you to say on that?

Ruling on Cattle and Chicken Foods.

Federal Food and Drug Board Makes Decision on a Class of Preparations Largely Sold by Grocers and General Storekeepers.

The Federal Food and Drug Board sends the "Grocery World" a copy of its latest food law decision—No. 90. It concerns the labeling of foods and medicinal mixtures for stock and poultry. These preparations are very largely sold by grocers and general stores, and the decision should therefore be carefully noted:—

> The department has frequently received inquiries in regard to the labeling of bran, of which the following is a fair sample:—
> Can the screenings of wheat, consisting principally of shrunken seed, etc., be put in the bran and it still be called bran, etc.
> Since the above is clearly in violation of those provisions of the law requiring that a food product be true to label, the department is of the opinion that it will be necessary to label such a mixture as "Bran and Screenings."
> It has recently come to the attention of the department that a number of the cattle and poultry foods sold on the American market contain enough poisonous weed seeds, such as corn cockle and jimson weed (Jamestown weed), to have a more or less toxic effect on poultry, cattle, etc. Poultry and cattle foods which contain poisonous weed seeds in appreciable quantities will be considered as adulterated in accordance with those provisions of the food and drugs act, June 30, 1906, forbidding the presence of poisonous or deleterious ingredients.
> The department has been asked by the manufacturers of medicinal mixtures for poultry, cattle, etc., whether such mixtures may, under the law, be labeled respectively as cattle and poultry foods. It is thought, first, that the words "Cattle Food" or "Poultry Food" should apply to cattle or poultry foods which are not mixed with any condimental or medicinal substance or substances; second, that mixtures of cattle and poultry food materials, with small quantities of condiments, such as anise seed, ginger, capsicum, etc., should be labeled as "Condimental Cattle Food," or "Condimental Poultry Food;" and third, that mixtures of cattle-food materials with medicinal substances, such as arsenic, sulphate of iron (copperas), etc., should not be labeled as foods, but as medicines or remedies. For example, under the latter ruling, a cattle food mixed with medicinal substances, such as arsenic, copperas, etc., should be plainly labeled as a remedy, or medicine, so as to differentiate clearly such a substance from a cattle food material unmixed with medicinal agents.

AMONG THE TRADE.

It is reported that Andrew Ross, new local agent for the Natural Food Co., has applied for a position with the Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co. and will shortly join that company.

Charleston and North Carolina beets are now coming forward and average 4 cents. The demand is good.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Self-raising Flour.

Often prepared by merely adding baking powder to ordinary flour. Many of them contain only a very small proportion of tartaric acid and too much bicarbonate of soda. The acids and carbonates should be mixed in the proportions required to neutralize each other.

By mixing 2 ounces of tartaric acid and 4 ounces of bicarbonate of soda with every 14 pounds of well-dried flour of a good quality a superior self-raising flour is easily produced. Three ounces of cream of tartar may be used instead of the tartaric acid if more convenient. A little ground rice may also be added to advantage.

Shrimps.

The true shrimp is a salt water long-tailed crustacean, about two inches long, of the order decapoda, or ten-footed animals. It is closely related to the prawn, and the latter are, in fact, often sold as shrimps.

The shrimp feeds on slugs, worms, and other small objects, and is itself liable to be eaten by other fishes and birds.

There are two species, the brown and the red. The brown are the most plentiful, larger, and more highly flavored. They swim near the shore, and are termed "buntings"; but the red are considered the most delicate. These carry a sword-like horn in their heads.

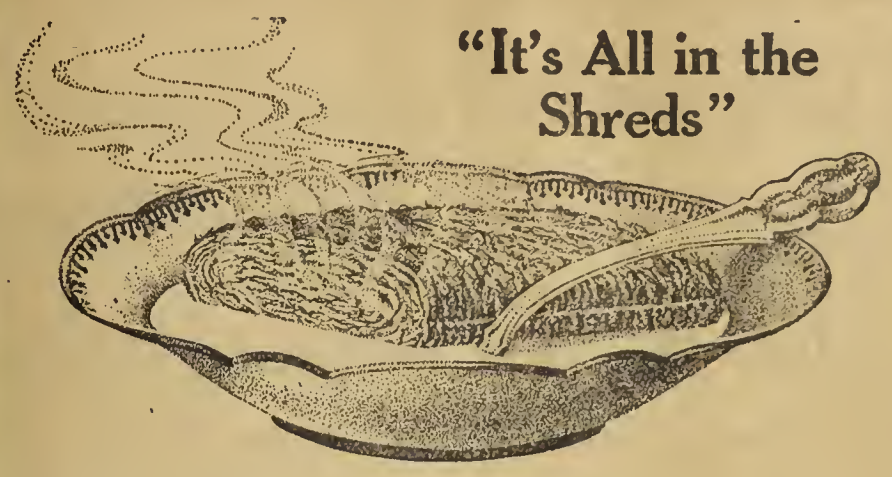
They are in season all the year, though used most in the summer months, and are always sold ready cooked.

Souchong Teas.

These are general names for three or four assortments of fine black teas.

The Chinese term for them is Sian chung, signifying "little plant," or "little sprouts."

The smallest are called Pha-ho; the largest, Toy-chong; and a medium size, Pow-chong.



Souchongs rank next to Pekoes, and are very strong, but lacking the delicate flavor of the latter, although generally scented with the flowers of the Tasmanium sambic and Gardenia florida.

First Souchong is a grade better than Second Souchong, although growing on the same shoot.

Spaghetti.

A smaller or finer sort of "paste," made in Naples, from the same flour and in the same way as macaroni, vermicelli, etc., but in long straight lines.

The words in Italian literally signify "little threads," hence it is of a much thinner and more fibry appearance than vermicelli and appears to be coming very much into fashion.

Retailers to Discuss Direct Buying at Next Brooklyn Association Meeting. Jobbers Asked to Present Their Side. New York Oleo Sales Still Hampered by High Federal Tax. Warning Against Bogus Check Fraud. Garnishee Bill Before Governor. Druggists Looking at Grocers' Wax and Cream of Tartar.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, April 24, 1908.

A debate on the question as to manufacturers selling direct to retailers is to take place at the meeting of the United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn next Tuesday evening. The former president, B. Bischoff, will take the side of the retailers, arguing in favor of the manufacturers selling freely to retailers and their exchanges, who buy in sufficient quantities, at the same prices as are charged the jobbers.

The wholesale grocers have been asked to send somebody to present their side of the discussion and it is hoped that this will be done. The association will have both sides presented, in any event, and it is believed that the debate will be interesting and will serve to crystallize the views of all who are present.

With reference to the oleomargarine prospects, under the recent court decision, allowing the sale of the product in this State, it was learned to-day that the manufacturers are not satisfied because they are hampered by the high Federal tax of 10 cents a pound on the product when colored. They will renew with vigor the old efforts to get this tax reduced, now that they can sell in this State. They assume that the two bills that were offered at Albany to prohibit the sale in this State will both fail to become laws. The Legislature adjourned yesterday when a mass of bills were rushed through, but as far as has been learned here the oleomargarine bills were not included. If the bills failed to pass the sale of the product may go on openly, provided only that the butterine is not colored and is properly stamped.

A representative of the oleomargarine interests said that they will themselves suggest the most stringent Federal regulations for the marking of the name on the packages and in the print of the butterine. The manufacturers will put forward the old argument that they should have as much right to color their product as the butter manufacturers have to color butter, and that the purpose of coloring the butterine is not to deceive but to make it more agreeable to the eye—the same purpose as the butter manufacturers have in giving a rich yellow color to butter that was originally white.

The manufacturers of oleomargarine and of butterine have no objection to the Federal tax of one-quarter of a cent a pound on the uncolored product. It looks as if the coming battles between the butter and the butterine interests will turn largely on the question of artificial coloring.

The State authorities claim that if the hotels or restaurants put colored butterine on their tables the law will be violated just as much as if a grocer sold the product in a colored condition.

If the Federal tax did not stand in the way the butterine manufacturers think their business would improve. It is more than likely that they expect to attack the State law against the coloring of the product. To alter Federal and State regulations seems a formidable task, but the manufacturers of butterine have undertaken big things before now.

As to the attitude of the retail grocers, a considerable number agree with L. J. Callanan, who said that he will not sell any of the butterine. He added, however, that he believes that it should be sold and that he has thought so for years. The reason, he said, that he has never sold a pound of the oleomargarine or butterine in his store, and that he will not handle it now, is to be found in the deceptive methods that have been used in trying to market the product. He believed that it should always have been sold for just what it is, without any coloring to make it resemble butter, and then, in his opinion, the article would now be respected, instead of being viewed everywhere with suspicion. This attitude of retail grocers may give a hint to the butterine manufacturers.

President H. Lohmann, of the United Retail Grocers' Association, recently received a letter signed apparently with the name of a good customer asking that the grocer cash a check drawn on a well-known bank and give the money to the bearer. The president, after refusing and finding that the check was a forgery, notified other members and learned that a number, including Louis Meyer, E. Hanson and H. Riecke, had received similar letters inclosing worthless checks. So far the man or men who sent the letters have not been caught.

The amended garnishee bill, for which the grocers and other merchants worked hard, passed the Legislature and was sent to Governor Hughes for his action. At this writing it has not been learned what the Governor will do. The grocers' associations have sent him resolutions asking him to approve the bill.

The United Cigar Manufacturers Co., of New York, shows in its annual report, filed this week, that it enjoyed prosperous times in 1907. The net profits were $1,310,068. The assets at the close of the year amounted, as shown by the general balance sheet, to $23,701,617.

The New York Association of Manufacturers' Representatives, recently organized, now has 56 members, including representatives of nearly all the houses selling specialty foods here. The jobbing houses are encouraging the new association. It has offices in the Powell Building.

Three grocers, brought into the bankruptcy court in one week, is a little unusual, but that is the record of the last seven days. In none of these cases are the debts heavy.

Patrick Keelan, 878 Tenth avenue, who began business seven years ago, filed a petition, admitting liabilities of $4,069, with assets nominally worth $2,100. The assets comprise accounts to the amount of $500, while the stock and fixtures, covered by a chattel mortgage, are valued at $1,600.

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed against Barnet Golding, a retailer at 215 Division street, by creditors with claims as follows: Standard Grocery Co., $415; Max Lesser, $39; Max Rubin, $75.

An involuntary petition was filed against the C. Carlisi Co., wholesale and retail dealers in groceries and wines at 63 Carmine street. The company was incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000.

The Albany Refrigerating and Warehouse Co., of which Frank Williams is the president, has joined the New York Mercantile Exchange and will have offices here, in the expectation of getting business for the warehouses at Albany.

Inspectors of the State Board of Pharmacy are making the rounds of the grocery stores, collecting samples of beeswax and of cream of tartar. They generally ask the grocer if the article is pure and make records of the reply. The grocers, through their associations, have been warned that they may innocently get into trouble by warranting the articles to be pure, although they know only what was told to them by the wholesalers from whom they got their supplies.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

There has been no change in the tea market during the week. The market is fairly maintained and values are fairly steady throughout, considering the fact that the season is approaching its end, and that this invariably depresses prices a little. Holders are a little more willing to pare prices down than they were earlier, but this is less so with low grades than with others. The consumptive demand is fair.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee continues about unchanged, with very little doing. Values are very steady, with practically no change to report. The only business doing in options is by way of postponing deliveries. Old-crop Santos, those grades known among the trade as soft-drinking Santos, are still hard to get, none of the valorization coffees having been offered as yet. The present distribution of coffee is from hand to mouth, and will probably continue to be as long as the syndicate's coffee is held unsold over the market. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged, as are Java and Mocha.

Fish.

The fish market has remained quiet during the week. Mackerel, particularly Irish grades, are still scarce and high, but occasionally a holder desirous of moving stock will concede a little. No actual market change has occurred, however. Cod, hake and haddock are steadily maintained, though very quiet. During the summer they will be little in evidence. Domestic sardines on spot are unchanged and quiet. As reported elsewhere, all packers have now named prices on a basis of $3.10 f. o. b. Eastport for quarter oils. Imported sardines have declined considerably, notably the large-sized fish. The price had to be reduced somewhat in order to sell. Salmon is unchanged and in fair demand.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged, but no firmer than they have been. Spot tomatoes average about 75 cents, f. o. b., and futures 77½ cents, f. o. b. The demand is light. Corn is dull and weak, the tendency being downward. There has been some very poor corn sold during the last few days. The corn market cannot be said to be in a healthy condition. Very little interest is manifested in futures. Peas are dull and on spot weak. Futures are dull. Apples are not very strong, and some rather low offers have been accepted during the week. Peaches are dull and still held on a high basis. The prospects for a good peach pack this year are good up to the present time. Baltimore small canned goods are unchanged and dull. California canned goods are steady in first hands and very dull. In jobbers' hands the market is weak on the whole line, particularly on asparagus.

Dried Fruits.

The prune market shows an advance. Last week sales were made on a 2-cent bag basis, but owing to reports from the coast of damage to the growing crop, the market on spot has moved up ¼ to ½ cent. Just how much truth there is in the crop damage reports cannot now be stated. There has scarcely been a season without them for many years. Peaches are still tending downward and in light demand. Apricots are also declining right along, some grades having dropped in all 8 to 9 cents from the price ruling a few weeks ago. Some coast people have named prices on new peaches and apricots around 7 cents, f. o. b. the coast, which is a fair normal price. Currants are in fair demand at unchanged prices. Raisins are still very weak and sick, and there seems to be no bottom to the market. Citron, dates and figs are unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans, both imported and domestic, are unchanged from last week. The demand is fair. Marrows are somewhat stiffer and are wanted. California limas are about unchanged and range, according to quality, from a fraction below 5 cents to 5.30 cents. Split peas of all grades are unchanged, firm, scarce and in light demand.

Butter.

The butter market is very active. The receipts of fresh butter clean up daily upon arrival, and the make is now about normal. Present conditions are likely

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

to last for a few days yet, and nothing will relieve the present scarcity until new grass butter is available. Under-grade butter is also cleaning up very closely and the market is firm on everything in the butter line, both solids and prints.

Eggs.

The egg market is firm at ½ cent advance over last week. There has been a very active demand for new-laid eggs, both for consumption and storage purposes, and the quality of the eggs now arriving is very fine. There will likely be a firm market as long as cool weather lasts.

Cheese.

The consumptive demand for cheese is good. Stocks in storage are light and fancy cheese is scarce. There has been no change during the past week in any grade. Some factories are making new cheese, and the first of it will probably come upon the market in about two weeks.

Provisions.

The market for all grades of hams, bellies and bacon is firm and unchanged. The consumptive demand for provisions is very good. Both pure and compound lard are firm and unchanged. No change has occurred in dried beef, barrel pork and canned meats, all of which are in fair trade.

Green Fruit.

Apples, Baldwins, $3 to $3.50; Hulbersons, $3; Spy, $2.75 to $3; Spitz, $2.50 to $3.50; Russetts, $2 to $3, demand fair to good; pineapples, $2.50 to $3.50 per box, demand slow; California oranges, $2.50 to $3 per box; Floridas, $2.50 to $3 per box, demand good; grapefruit, $3 to $5 per box, demand fair; lemons, $2.25 to $3, demand slow; bananas, jumbo, $1.75 to $2; firsts, $1.50 to $1.75; 8-hands, $1.10 to $1.20; 7-hands, 75 to 90 cents; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents; reds, $1.50 to $2.50, demand poor.

Produce.

Pennsylvania potatoes, $1 per bushel; York State, 95 cents per bushel, demand fair; Ohio globe onions, $2.75 per 2-bushel bag; York State, $2.75 per 2-bushel bag; Bermudas, $2 to $2.75 per crate, demand fair; carrots, $2 per barrel, 50 cents per basket, demand good; sweet potatoes, $1.15 per bushel, 60 cents per basket, demand fair; yellow turnips, 45 cents per basket, demand good; beets, 3½ to 4 cents per bunch, demand good; Danish cabbage, $4 to $5 per 100, $1.25 to $1.50 per barrel, demand fair; watercress, 2 to 2½ cents per bunch, demand good; scullions, $1 per 100, demand fair; horseradish, $3 to $3.50 per barrel, demand fair; spinach, $1 to $1.50 per barrel, demand fair; radishes, $1 to $3 per 100 bunches, demand slow.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

We are having a better demand for spot tomatoes. We are picking up quite a few lots of No. 3 standards at 75 cents per dozen, and some of these tomatoes are excellent quality. We find, however, that where unlabeled goods are wanted it is a difficult matter to buy them at 75 cents per dozen, and also that quite a few orders are coming in at a price of 77½ and 80 cents per dozen, where the quality justifies it.

The demand for future tomatoes we think is improving. There is no large business, but a better inquiry.

THOS. G. CRANWELL & CO.
Baltimore, Md.

No. 2.

During the preceding week the developments in the market here indicated an improvement in the demand for tomatoes, which was followed this week by a sufficient increase in the demand to encourage the holders. One of our well-known commission houses, who are specialists in tomatoes, pointed out in their market letter last week that there are, nowadays, some eight or ten different grades of standard (?) tomatoes offered at as many different prices, and cautioned the jobbers to examine carefully what they buy. We second the motion. There is, of course, but one standard of quality, and the buyer knows it when he sees it. If he chooses to buy a lower quality because of a small difference in the price he knows presumably what he is doing, but the seller who deliberately offers seconds, or so-called off-standards, as choice standards, strictly standards, etc., violates a well-known principle in business and lowers the standard of the business in which he is engaged. As a rule, he is the first to cry for reform, with a big R, when the boomerang hits him. It is just as legitimate to buy and sell one grade as another unless done by misrepresentation. It is up to the buyer to insist upon getting the quality he buys.

The buying of tomatoes for future delivery was larger during this week than at any time since the first of the year, but the total volume of the sales is very far behind the sales up to the same date last year. Usually by this time the canners have contracted with the growers for the coming crop and all the details have been worked out. Not so this year. The small buying of futures causes the canners to hold off the growers, and the latter must soon decide whether to grow tomatoes this year or put in other crops that are more certain to show them satisfactory returns. The Only Secret to Good Bacon

THERE is nothing magical about bacon. Any packer with the proper facilities and a real desire to make goods he'll be proud of, can produce it.

First, the right kind of selected raw material; then, careful, delicate curing; and you have good bacon—you're sure to have. That's all we put into Swift's Premium Bacon. Why, then, isn't all bacon as good as Swift's? Because one or both of those two elements are lacking either all or some of the time.

present it looks like the size of the pack this year as compared with last year will be reduced materially. Those jobbers who are waiting for still lower prices for future tomatoes may be disappointed.

In the general lines of fruits, vegetables and oysters there was a small increase in the demand this week, but it is far less than usual in the month of April in this market, and the sellers continue to show a disposition to accept business at a shade under the asking prices.

Coffee.

The receipts at Rio and Santos during the month of March were disappointingly large, but since the beginning of this month a considerable falling off has been experienced, indicating that our estimate of 10,500,000 bags for the current crop will be rather over than under the mark.

The trade is naturally influenced by the size of the crop, and generally draws its ideas with regard to its size from a comparison of the current receipts with those for the corresponding period in previous years, this has quite often led to misconception.

Distributers in the interior were of late somewhat reluctant in making purchases. Nevertheless, there is a healthy trade doing in the aggregate, as is evidenced by the large deliveries from port stocks; purchases whilst smaller in quantity are more frequent and reflect the necessary requirements for consumption.

For many years past interior distributers were guided to a large extent by the course of prices ruling on the New York coffee exchange. Then liberal reserve stocks were carried in the interior. That the price ruling on the coffee exchange has lost its influence on the value of actual coffee is verified by the fact that Santos coffees are selling freely at present at the highest price reached during the present crop year, whilst prices on the exchange are about ¾ of a cent a pound lower than they were a few months ago. This condition is due to the withholding from the market of about 7,750,000 bags of Government coffee (principally Santos), and the simultaneous reduction of trade holdings.

The available visible supply of Brazil coffees (treating the Government coffee as not available) was on December 1, 1907, about 7,950,000 bags. On the first of this month these trade holdings were reduced to about 6,500,000 bags, and they promise to be still further reduced at least 1,500,000 bags during the next three months.

The consumption of Brazil coffee for the next three months is calculated by us on the basis of last year's consumption during the same period, and we think the actual result will prove to be rather larger than smaller.

Furthermore, we must bear in mind, that new crop Brazil coffee is not likely to reach consuming markets in quantity much before the end of August, so that these markets will experience a still further reduction of their respective supplies of available coffee from the figures above referred to, even if the whole stock now at Rio and Santos plus the receipts up to the end of June is shipped out.

With regard to the future position of the article nothing tangible can be said at this time.

Crop reports vary as usual, the consensus of opinion appears to be that the next Santos crop will exceed the current one by about 2,000,000 bags, whilst the Rio crop will be a little smaller than the present one.

Spices.

We can report a more active market during the past week, although there has been very few important changes in values. Stocks are very small and the quality in some instances is hardly up to standard.

Pepper.—Futures were cabled lower during the week. Spot stocks are fairly firm, due to scarcity. It is reported that some peppers will be in a somewhat produced reduction, but at this writing it is hard to tell just what the stocks will amount to. Prices are unusually low and not likely to decline further.

Cayennes.—Market is firm, but rather quiet. Demand is slightly better, which will improve from now on.

Cloves.—Market is steady and supplies are limited. Prices are unchanged.

Pimento (Allspice).—Present low values have made a very active market. Prices are certainly safe.

Nutmegs are exceedingly low and safe. Principal decline has been in 80s and 110s.

Cassias.—Saigon and Batavia are scarce. Same can be said of China Rolls in cases. There is practically none on the market.

Ginger.—Stocks are very small, and very little is coming from abroad. It has had the effect of making a very firm market.

Seeds for pickling now in demand. Celery, Coriander, Mustard, all unchanged. Caraway remains exceedingly firm and there is practically none to be had under 10 cents.

MARKET NOTES.

Florida potatoes are now coming regularly and average $5 per barrel. The demand is very light, however. Bermudas are still coming forward and average $7.50. They are worth more than the Floridas, but hardly half as much more. The demand is fair.

There is very little good salad in market at the present time. The range is $2.50 to $2.75 for Southern stock, and the demand for anything fine is active. Near-by salad is also coming forward and averages $2.50 per barrel of 45 heads.

All the rhubarb on the market is from near-by points and ranges from 2½ to 3 cents per bunch. The quality is good and the demand excellent.

Florida tomatoes show an advance over the lowest prices now ruling. The present range is $2.25 to $2.50, and the quality is better than it has been. Hothouse tomatoes still average 20 cents per pound and are selling fairly well.

Jersey asparagus is now in market and ranges from 25 to 50 cents per bunch. The quality is good. Extra large Southern asparagus ranges from 45 to 50 cents for the best, and ordinary stock 25 cents. The demand is good.

North Carolina peas are scarce and wanted. They bring $2 to $2.50 per one-third barrel basket. The peas Charleston is shipping are mostly poor. Florida peas are done.

Florida is the only shipper of string beans up to the present time. The range is lower—$2 to $2.50. The demand is slow, owing to excessive supply.

Florida cucumbers are considerably off—$2 to $2.50 per crate. Hothouse cues average $1.25 per dozen and are selling.

The first boxes of California cherries are begining to come forward.

The first few boxes of new lima beans are in market from Florida, but went begging owing to bad condition. They should have brought $4.50 to $5, but had to be sold at $1.50 to $2.

Do you feel as if it would be risky and reckless to give up your delivery team for a Lindsley Car?

So it would if you were taking a leap in the dark. But when it is an established fact that the Lindsley Car will do more than three teams—it will carry 1,500 pounds 30 miles on a gallon of gasoline—then the recklessness lies in not giving up the team.

Particularly when the car costs so much less to keep than the team. Less to feed, less to drive, less to keep healthy.

Let's have a little correspondence about this.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Columbus, Ga., February 17, 1908.
Editor Science of Advertising.

Gentlemen:—If you think the inclosed advertisement of the Georgia Grocery Co., from our Sunday paper, is deserving of a mention in your columns, we would appreciate a marked copy of your paper containing same.

Yours truly,
C. M. DAVIS.

With this letter came a marked copy of an advertisement measuring 14 inches long across five columns. The paper in which it appeared is the "Columbus Enquirer-Sun," of Columbus, Ga. Here is the reduced reproduction:

There is no doubt whatever that anybody who saw this page of the Georgia paper saw the advertisement of the Georgia Grocery Co. It is unquestionably impressive and attractive. It would have been even more so if the paper had not spread a big black theatre advertisement clear across the top of the page. That not only subordinates this and every other advertisement on the page, but it also subordinates the reading matter. The typographical appearance of the entire page is spoiled by the theatre advertisement in my judgment.

Striking as it is, I do not consider this a good advertisement, by which I mean I consider it almost certain that it will not produce results, direct or indirect, in proportion to its probable cost. Why do I say that? Because it doesn't contain a single statement which is not made by other grocers a thousand times every day. Shorn of its verbiage, this advertisement simply says: We sell only the best products; we have a telephone; we deliver promptly; we keep the following products (every one of which is handled by practically every other grocer in business). Where is the strength of such an advertisement? How can it be expected to attract any special trade? The consuming trade can be divided into three classes: (1) those who deal with you now; (2) those who do not deal with you but could; (3) those who could not, owing to distance or some other unsurmountable reason. Naturally a newspaper advertisement is intended to get trade from both of the first two classes, but if it only gets trade from your own customers, who might have bought anyway, you could almost say it was wasted. The main object of an advertisement is to get new trade, either transient or permanent. Every person who sees this advertisement, and who is not already a customer of your store, is certain to be a customer of some other. Unless your advertisement persuades her that your store will offer her better service, in some way or other, what reason has she for leaving her present store for yours? Is the making of claims that are not only made by her present grocer, but every other, sufficient reason for the change? It seems to me decidedly not. If I were a grocer, or an advertiser in any line, I should keep this fact constantly in mind.

New Sardine Prices Above Last Year.

Domestic Fish Combine Names Figures on the Coming Pack.

The combine which now controls the business of packing domestic sardines named prices on the new pack during the week. They proved to be exactly what the "Grocery World" predicted they would be several weeks ago—on the basis of $3.10 for ¼ oils, f. o. b. Eastport, Me.

The full list of new prices, all in a large way f. o. b. Eastport, is as follows: Keyless drawn, ¼ oils, $3.10; roll top key, ¼ oils, $3.30; roll top key, ¼ mustards, $3.10; ¼ mustards, small drawn, $2.90; ¼ mustards, large drawn, $3.10; ¼ mustards, 3-piece can (large), $3.30; ¾ mustards, 48 cans, $2.55; ¾ mustards, 48 cans, roll top keys, $2.60.

Smedley's Defense of Co-operative Buying

Secretary of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, Who Knows More of Co-operative Buying Among Retailers Than Any Other Man in the United States, Explains the Beginnings of the Plan and Defends It as Needed in the Small Dealer's Self-defense. Jobbers Favoring of Chain Defense Brought Co-operative Buying About.

[The article which appears below was contributed by Wm. Smedley, Secretary of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association, to a special number of the New York "Journal of Commerce," issued last Monday, April 20th. It is a defense of co-operative buying by the man who probably knows more about it than any other man in America. Being considered of vital importance it is reprinted in full.]

The system of present day merchandising does not involve the elimination of any agency heretofore used for that purpose, but a readjustment to fit the conditions created is strenuously demanded.

When the middleman performs a service to those on either side of him, just so long will his services be required as a distributer. When he fails to perform this service there will be no necessity for him and he will be eliminated.

Mercantile distinctions as to what constitutes a jobber or retailer are rapidly being obliterated. Merchandising in this age is conducted differently from what it was years ago; then the jobber was a large factor; the retailer was small. Business expansion produced a bigger retailer and the retailing of merchandise has become a science. Competition forced retailers to buy in such quantities as to make it possible for them to meet it. Hence with a large purchasing power and the ability to handle large blocks of goods many retailers were in a position to buy direct, and—they bought. Manufacturers eager for distribution went over jobbers' heads and sold to big retailers at jobbers' prices, thus creating competition that the smaller retailers could not meet.

The jobber took a hand and, by dividing his profit with another favored class, created another condition. Then came that product of the nineteenth century, the chain store, which soon became a power. It left the small retailer in a position to be either crushed out or to join hands with his fellow retailer and place himself in a position to preserve his business. Thus, co-operation or co-operative buying commenced, not as a blow at the jobber, but as a last effort to provide means to meet conditions. Neither was this decided upon until the retailer was compelled, by reason of the jobber's absolute refusal to lift a hand to save him.

Fostered by the jobber, the chain-store system soon kicked away the props and, being in a position to buy in jobbers' quantities, was enabled to do so until to-day there are many retail systems that can distribute larger blocks of certain classes of merchandise than the jobbers. The dry goods grocery department created another condition along the same line until, against his will, the retailer adopted the only sane solution of the problem, direct buying.

So much for contributory causes. This short cut has, in a measure, revolutionized distribution; the manufacturer has, in many instances, been forced to sell direct in order to control distribution and to limit the price at which his products should be sold to the consumer. This has preserved an equal balance and given an opportunity to the retailer for profit that he would not ordinarily have. If, as our jobbing friends declare, all goods should be distributed through them, how long would it be before they, in their eagerness for a big sale, would cut prices to the big buyer to the detriment of the smaller one? Should there be class distinction? Instead of "retailer" and "jobber" why not "merchants"? Should a department store be compelled to buy shoes from a shoe jobber and pay a tribute, when it can handle the product of a factory? Should not any man or men, individually or collectively, with the money to pay for, and the brains to sell, buy goods at the quantity price, if he or they will distribute them in accordance with manufacturer's rules?

This condition would apply equally; the jobber sells to hotels, institutions and even to the consumer, and no complaint is heard from the retailer. Why should he complain? Large institutions, hotels, restaurants, etc., were long years ago classed as entitled to buy from the jobber by resolution of the retailers' association, and this action was taken long before co-operative buying was even thought of. Why? By reason of the right of the user of large lots of merchandise to buy in the cheapest market. Jobbers, even with retail stores, were tolerated, believing that the jobber had a right to engage in any business that he could employ his capital in. By the same token, the retailer believes that he has the right to be a wholesaler to himself. If each branch of trade kept strictly within its own lines and there were no favored classes; if each buyer bought at the same price, regardless of quantity, then there would be no occasion for united effort. But why discuss a fruitless subject? The fact remains that competition regulates trade methods and no hard and fast rule can ever be established that will solve present commercial problems. Local conditions vary; a rule that would apply in one place would not operate in another.

We contend for the principle of a quantity limit and a quantity price alike to either retailer or jobber and an obligation to those buying on these conditions to distribute according to the rules laid down by the manufacturer. To compel a quantity buyer to pay an unearned tribute to a middleman is a gross injustice alike to retailer and manufacturer.

Co-operative buying is condemned by those unfamiliar with it as trespassing upon the rights of others. When was the right created to compel a large purchaser to pay toll when it was not necessary? Is it just to expect a class of retailers to forever sit still and see business drifting away without raising a hand for self-betterment? The retailer, struggling for a right to exist, has a right to avail himself of any chance to save himself from total extinction. Co-operative buying provided the plank that saved the organized retailer from elimination and, until conditions are changed, co-operative buying will be engaged in by those who know its benefits.

Through co-operation the retailer has been enabled to meet competition and to make money, and, once having tested the benefits, will be loath to relinquish them. We admit that the upbuilding of the retailer has been to some extent at the expense of the jobber, but is that the fault of the retailer? Is there any law that will prohibit a merchant from helping himself? Is not the highest form of organization one that will enable a man to help himself? When has the jobber, as a class, taken upon himself any portion of the retailer's grievances and by conference or otherwise attempted a solution of trade evils? Not in our experience has the jobber been willing to take anything but a selfish attitude. All business is selfish, but intelligent selfishness produces better results. The conditions created for the retailer have been met by the retailer in a dignified manner. Not being able to obtain assistance from those from whom he naturally expected it he did the next best thing, he helped himself.

Co-operation is assailed because it has been found to be a good thing for the retailer. Why all the trouble now when for nearly twenty years the system has been growing? If wrong now, it was wrong in its inception and should have been crushed out when it would have been an easy matter. Then it was considered a joke, now it is considered seriously. It has been built on a solid foundation and will live by reason of its usefulness to a class who have proved it and found it not wanting.

A charge is made that it benefits the small retailer. It does and we are proud of it. When retailers big and little are willing to work together, to give and take, to make sacrifices, to co-operate, "one for all and all for one," then we think organization is more than an empty sound. For co-operation means quite as much to the larger merchant as it does to the small one; the larger merchant makes it possible, by his larger output, to increase the purchasing power; in turn he receives a benefit in being enabled to carry less stock, thus reducing the amount of capital tied up in sundries. The small retailer can buy often and in lots to meet his requirements, paying for them promptly and turning his capital over and over many times in a year.

Co-operattive buying has taught the retailer the value of cash as a purchasing power, and has enabled him to realize that in order to buy right he must pay right. Buying right, he has been enabled to sell right. It has made the retailer a seven-day man instead of one who was willing to take all the credit he could get. Co-operative buying has placed the jobber in a position to exact from the retailer payments according to the terms of the sale. The manufacturer has been benefited through co-operative buying, inasmuch as he has had open to him a channel of distribution that insured the friendly co-operation of the retailer, and enabled his goods to go to the consumer with a ready good will. The retailer, through the co-operative department of the association, has ably seconded the manufacturer's effort to market new products. Knowing they could be purchased through the association has been to him the seal of approval and a signal that his co-operation was not only desired, but welcome. There has been no cutting on goods thus purchased; manufacturers, by selling through the association, could control the price to the consumer. This has been beneficial and instead of proprietary goods being made a football, they have been sold upon terms that insured a proper profit to everybody concerned. The association buying collectively has become a large purchaser, oftentimes buying blocks of goods in remarkable quantities. Manufacturers' rights have been preserved, inasmuch as private brands have been excluded; the main business being to supply its members with goods the consumer wanted. To buy what the grocer feels the consumer wants and then to push its sale is one of the chief aims of co-operative buying.

Briefly stated, the independent retailers have been compelled to get together for protective purposes and to insure for themselves a square deal; to buy supplies on as good terms as are given to any large buyer. This is all that is wanted; that no retail buyer shall be favored with any better price than he can secure. In the working out of this plan he has solved the problem of economical distribution. Confidence in his abilities has been established along lines that make him a better merchant. He has been taught that merchandising is a science; that to sell right he must buy right, and that to meet his obligations he must get a profit on what he sells.

Where conditions are such that the retailer buys on equal terms with his competitors, we see no necessity for co-operative buying, and have consistently advocated that retailers, all things being equal, buy through the jobber. But when, in order to preserve his business and meet competition, it becomes necessary to co-operate, then we believe co-operative buying is not only a necessity but a duty on the part of the retailer.

The local condition familiar to the writer is such that without co-operative buying retail grocers would dwindle away in large numbers, their places would be taken by chain systems so powerful in their distributive facilities as to make them an arbitrary force that would be not only a menace to the manufacturer, but would eliminate the jobber absolutely.

For the retailer to go back to old conditions is impossible. Jobbers must accept the competition. To persecute is to bind the forces closer together and bring to the assistance of the retailer strong friends. Alienating the friendship of the retailer from the jobber means only loss. Co-operative buying is for the purpose of giving the retailer a square deal, which has been denied him. When there is no necessity for co-operation it will cease, and not before then. In the meantime the retailer will fight, without malice, but with a determination to win and establish forever the right to organize and to buy, individually or collectively, in the cheapest market, and upon the same terms as other buyers in like quantities.

What the NEW Cooking Does to BEANS

¶ Until we tried the new automatic cooker on red kidney beans, we thought it would make the biggest difference in quality, but you ought to see the difference between a can of red kidney beans cooked by the old process and a can of ONARGA beans cooked by the new—no comparison.

The automatic cooker cooks the whole mass evenly. Every bean is cooked just enough, and the bean on the edge reaches precisely the same stage as the bean in the centre.

Does this affect the flavor? Well, you just ought to taste it!

In the same issue appeared a brief article on "Direct Sales by Manufacturer to Retailer an Injustice," by Andrew J. Wellington, of Clark, Chapin & Bushnell, wholesale grocers of New York. Being a good illustration of the poverty of logical resource which characterizes all of the jobbers' arguments against the rights of the quantity buyer, it is also reproduced verbatim:—

There are some people so constituted that if, when riding on a railway car, they can escape the notice of the conductor and so evade paying for the service the railway company renders them, they feel that they have accomplished something that redounds greatly to their credit. Likewise there are some manufacturers and retail dealers who, while availing themselves of the services of the wholesale grocer, feel that they have done something meritorious if they can get these services without allowing the wholesaler a fair compensation. Others do this through ignorance of the situation and without consideration of its injustice.

Most manufacturers of food products desire to have their goods placed within the reach of all consumers, whether they be in large cities or small towns or villages, but they are well aware that they could not do this in any but the largest towns and cities without the aid of the wholesaler. It would be too expensive a proposition to give credit to all who now sell their goods. By far the larger part of the accounts would be too small and the work would be too expensive.

Most manufacturers who now sell to the largest retailers direct acknowledge that they place from 80 to 90 per cent. of their products through the wholesaler. Yet for this 10 to 20 per cent. of their business they make it impossible for the wholesaler to get more for their goods than the bare cost of handling—often not even that. In fact, such manufacturers, in cases as where they solicit orders direct from retail dealers, to be shipped by "their jobber," realize that they cannot get enough advance over the large dealer price, by selling such orders at so small an advance, as to leave a margin for the jobber. Is it fair? Is it just?

Now from the retailers' side of the case: There are almost no retailers in the United States who are not obliged to depend upon the jobbers for most of their supplies. If they are up-to-date dealers they aim to supply their trade with everything that may be called for in a grocery store. How many of these articles can they buy in sufficient quantity to make it economical to buy of the manufacturer? If they did this, let them think of the amount of capital which would be tied up, to say nothing of the amount of dead stock they would inevitably accumulate. And even on those items which they buy of the manufacturer, are they always ready to buy the quantity? Are they never suddenly "sold out" and forced to secure an immediate supply? In such cases they inevitably turn to "their jobber."

Is it wise or is it just that for these services rendered, and many more besides, retailers should try to evade paying a fair profit on all the goods they buy? The retailer who puts himself in the hands of an honest jobber does not pay more than a fair compensation for the services rendered—such as the benefit of stocks well bought, advice in purchasing, quick delivery of goods when needed, small quantities when large would be a burden and the benefit of trained buyers in all lines of goods.

The manufacturer in turn has the services of an army of salesmen who penetrate to all parts of the country—remote as well as near—the accounts they have to keep are fewer, the bad debts less or almost none at all and the payments prompt. Let both the manufacturer who sells to the retailer and the retailer who buys some things of the manufacturer consider whether they would, if they could, eliminate the jobber altogether. And then consider, if the jobber is a necessity, whether selling direct from manufacturer to the retailer is not unjust.

The general disposition of people in this country is to fight against injustice. England forced the Colonists to do this with disastrous results to England. Is it just or wise to force the wholesale grocer to do the same? He does not propose to calmly sit by and be eliminated. Nor can he be without great disaster to the grocery trade in general.

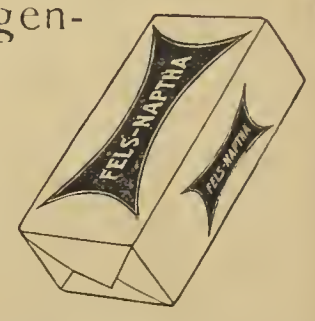
Advertising.

(1) Magazine Advertising.—There is probably greater distinctiveness in the advertising of Ralston Purina products in the magazines than any other products known. There is the miller with his checkerboard apron, holding the checkerboard package inviting the housekeepers of the world to eat breakfast with him and try his unequaled flour from the whole of the wheat. Then there's the phrase "Where Purity is Paramount," which distinguishes this advertising and has always distinguished the products of this mill. The circulation of this advertising includes such prominent journals as "The Ladies' Home Journal," "Saturday Evening Post," "Youth's Companion," "Collier's" "Good Housekeeping," and many other well-known publications. Grocers everywhere know of the splendid reputation for purity and wholesomeness enjoyed by the goods in the checkerboard packages among the best class of housekeepers.

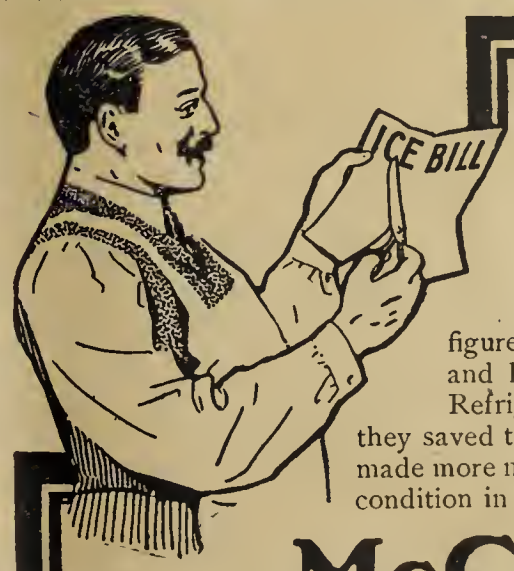
(2) Window Displays.—The mill furnishes a handsome checkerboard window display for grocers which will match the magazine advertising and remind housekeepers to come back to their good old friend the Ralston Miller.

(3) Checkers.—The mill furnishes a game of attractive children's checkers which are very useful in introducing these products.

(4) Samples are furnished freely for thorough and careful distribution among the order baskets; also for house to house distribution—inside sampling. In many quarters trade is showing a great increase as a result of this kind of work.



The Ralston sample looks small because it is concentrated food, but it cooks up enough for breakfast for five people on account of its expanding nature described elsewhere.



A full line of Ralston Foods equip a grocer with as fine a cereal stock as it is possible for him to secure and he has the satisfaction of knowing that the manufacturers do everything in their power to first create a demand for these products, thus moving them from the shelves, and their quality is a positive guarantee that they will keep selling. Here is a list of the checkerboard packages which should be conspicuously displayed on the shelves of every up-to-date grocer in the land: Ralston's Health Food, Ralston's Purina Whole Wheat Flour, Ralston's Purina Graham Flour, Ralston's Hominy Grits, Ralston's Barley Food.

The End of the Game

with Fels-Naptha imitations is generally the wind-up of the free distribution. This is positive proof that the imitations lack the merit of the genuine and fail to do the work.

The store that lists longest and grows fastest is the store that sells and pushes genuine goods—like Fels-Naptha.

Cut Down Your Ice Bill

When you buy a McCray Refrigerator you use less ice—and it actually pays for itself. Many grocers have figured it up in dollars and cents, and have found that their McCray Refrigerators cost them nothing—they saved the money on the ice bill and made more money on account of the perfect condition in which their goods were kept.

McCray

have the best system of circulation. They keep everything sweet, free from taint, and absolutely dry. A McCray Refrigerator in your store will attract attention because of its elegant finish, and it will actually sell more goods for you because they will be kept in better condition, and be more tempting to your customers. McCray Refrigerators are made in all sizes for immediate shipment, or built to order, and every refrigerator is absolutely guaranteed.

Write your name and address on a postal—ask for catalog No. 65 for grocers, or No. 58 for meat markets. Don't delay a minute. Do this now before you forget. Every moment's delay means the loss of real money and trade to you.

Lent.

Once every year, in Lent, my wife insists that I go to church. I'm an unregenerate old cuss, and I don't have the love for sermons that I ought to have. Nevertheless I let myself be dragged along and usually get there, once anyway.

This year it was on the last day in Lent, the Saturday before Easter. The preacher seemed like a mighty decent fellow—a man, not a nightshirt with a stick in it, like some of 'em.

The point of what he said was this: that the way to live right was to live up to the principles of simple honesty and give everybody a square deal. Doing that, he said, would satisfy every requirement and get us through all right.

One thing he said hit me hard. It wasn't any excuse; he said, to say that a man in business couldn't be literally honest because if he was his business would be ruined. Let it be ruined, was his idea. Get out of it into some other business where you could be honest.

But where is one?

You know it's always been my idea that actual, literal honesty ain't possible in business as it is conducted to-day.

This preacher brought in a number of simple illustrations, among which was this: that the measure of decency for a storekeeper was for him to consider his customers' interests the same as his own.

As a matter of fact, I know a whole lot of storekeepers who put their customers' interests ahead of their own.

They give their customers a squarer deal than they do their own business.

No merchant gives his own business a square deal when he lets it lag behind in any way at all. If making money was as easy as getting into a rut we'd all be rich in no time.

I see several hundred retail grocery businesses in the course of a year. Very few of 'em ever get altogether in a rut. I've seen some businesses that were the most inconsistent things you ever saw. Every department but one would be in perfect shape—up to date and all right. The one department would be run down something fierce.

There's a grocer in Philadelphia who's this way. He falls down on keeping his store clean. His windows would be a disgrace to a blind man's house. But outside of this his business is above the average—he's wide-awake all the time to grab the main chance. How he can be so up-to-the-minute in other things and let his place get so filthy I can't understand. It's a curious little weak place in human nature.

I said to a friend who is also a close friend of this grocer not long ago, "Why don't you tell ——— to wash his windows? They're about the limit!"

Some time after I asked him if he ever mentioned the matter of the windows. He said he had. The grocer's answer was, "We're all so busy we ain't had time to wash 'em."

I admit it's better to run a dirty store well than to have a clean store and run it down. I used to think that if a man kept his store clean it was a sure sign he'd succeed. I've seen so many clean stores fail or come near it that I don't think so any more.

Neither is a dirty store always a sign of shiftlessness.

I have another grocer in my mind whose weak point is his bookkeeping. His ledger looks like a ten-year-old boy's. You can't see the ink for the blots. A lot of his accounts are kept around on odd slips of paper—the backs of envelopes and so on.

Yet he has a fine store and as near as any outsider can judge it's run about right. Looks so, anyway. If he'd bring his bookkeeping system up to date I wouldn't know a better greased little business.

Don't make any mistake about me. I know the difference between essentials and non-essentials. I know that keeping sloppy books ain't the first of the essentials, and that a man can do that and still make money and be successful.

All the same it's one of the important departments of his business.

I've personally talked with another grocer who to save his soul can't seem to devise a system of delivering goods that will keep his customers satisfied. Like the other two he has a good store in other respects. I know what the trouble is—he uses one wagon to do the work of two. He should really have two wagons, but through a false idea of keeping down expense he refuses to do it. There's nothing stingy about him in other things—he's broad-minded and all right.

I do consider delivering goods one of the essentials.

I don't pretend to know much about Lent, but they tell me it's a time to sort of take account of stock—see what's wrong and buck up.

If I had a store I believe I'd have a business Lent. I mean by that I'd take up all the departments of my business one by one and look at it under a microscope. Am I getting all I ought to out of my advertising? Have I got the shortest and quickest way of keeping books? Am I an easy mark on collections? Am I discounting enough bills? Is my delivery system on the bum? Am I getting all the profit I could get on everything? Does my stock fill the bill?

If every retailer would do that once a year and act on what he found, there'd be fewer wolves knocking at grocery store doors.

THE STROLLER.

Johnson's Eversharp Slicing Machine

All the latest up-to-date improvements. Fully protected by four recent United States patents

Five little sharp pointed toothed wheels, located in the throat of the machine, all rotating on one shaft. They hold the meat firmly, close up to the knife, and cause the meat to be fed evenly, top and bottom alike. They act as a back bone to soft, moist, yielding meat, and insure slices of uniform thinness, no slabs or wedges cut to offend customers. THIS VALUABLE FEATURE IS PATENTED—NO OTHER MACHINE HAS IT.

Two circular tracks, finished up absolutely true and three hardened steel rollers ground perfectly round, gliding over these polished tracks with a smooth, easy, frictionless motion. These tracks and rollers prevent the knife edge from touching the iron face of the machine—absolutely nothing to dull the knife except the meat it slices. OUR PATENTS COVER THIS IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENT—NO OTHER MACHINE HAS IT.

A fluted-faced meat clamp that holds the soft meat rigid and firm while being sliced. It holds the butt end of a big knuckle, or it holds a little half-ounce end, and it holds them right—no slipping or getting away. A PATENTED FEATURE THAT NO OTHER MACHINE HAS.

Two ball jointed claws—these claws connect the meat with the feed mechanism; they grasp, hold and feed meat of any kind and every size and shape—they will feed a tiny scrap close up to the knife. This patented feature alone is worth five times the cost of the machine. It will save two dollars' worth of meat that always went to waste on every hundred pounds you bought. NO OTHER MACHINE HAS THIS PATENTED FEATURE.

Our patented sharpening device uses a razor hone of the very finest quality and our patented guide and gauge enables any unskilled clerk to produce a keen, smooth razor-like edge in less than a minute's time. Any one can sharpen this machine right, and no one need be troubled with a dull-edge knife. You can slice tons of beef, and your knife will still be sharp. NO OTHER MACHINE HAS SUCH A COMPLETE AND PERFECT SHARPENING DEVICE AS THIS ONE.

Our knives are made in our own works of the finest English steel, manufactured and imported to our order. They are heated to a nicety in a patented non-oxydizing gas furnace, and hardened in oil by an experienced expert, tempered to an exactness by a thermometer, ground concave by special process and fitted to a special patented hollow-ground bed, with a cutting-edge hard, tough and smooth, though they cost three times as much as ordinary knives, yet their superb action justifies the extra expense.

The EVERSHARP machines have the most complete and perfect feed-motion—an arrangement so perfectly simple, it is simply perfect. A large knuckle of beef, firmly grasped by the small end, is fed eighty slices to the inch until five hundred and sixty perfect slices are cut off, without once stopping the machine. NO OTHER MACHINE CAN CUT HALF THIS NUMBER OF SLICES WITHOUT STOPPING THE MACHINE AND READJUSTING THE MEAT.

We sell these machines for forty-six dollars, on monthly payments, and allow a liberal discount for all cash. Inquiries solicited. Facts and figures furnished.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Canning Window.

In centre are six cases of empty fruit jars, pints, quarts and half-gallons. To each side of jars are jellies and preserves. To the front of window are empty jelly glasses, jar rings and paraffine. You can improve this window by placing baskets of plums, grapes, peaches, or any fruits in season to the front of window.

Have a card extending from the top of window reading thus:—

> For the housewife who does preserving we offer jelly tumblers at 19 cents a doz. For the housewife who is too busy to do preserving we have the best of pure jellies and preserves.

dow with clean white paper. Place an empty corn case covered with white paper in the centre of the window, upon which stand a full box of dates with the box part taken away, exposing the dates without any covering whatever. Break some of the dates away from the top as if they had been sold, as by so doing the centre of the column of dates will be exposed, showing that the dates are as good inside the column as they are on the outside. On the front side of the box print a sign as in the illustration.

On either side of the column of dates lean a box or more of nice layer figs (ten-pound boxes will do). Use as many boxes as you have room for without crowding.

Dates and Fig Window.

What is more pleasing to the eye than a nice clean window filled with fresh dates and figs?

First cover the floor of the window with clean white paper. Place an empty corn case covered with white paper in the centre of the window, upon which stand a full box of dates with the box part taken away, exposing the dates without any covering whatever. Break some of the dates away from the top as if they had been sold, as by so doing the centre of the column of dates will be exposed, showing that the dates are as good inside the column as they are on the outside. On the front side of the box print a sign as in the illustration.

On either side of the column of dates lean a box or more of nice layer figs (ten-pound boxes will do). Use as many boxes as you have room for without crowding.

Along the front edge and around the borders of the window arrange package figs and dates. Alternate, making a sort of border for the display, which will set off the display, especially so as they are generally packed with colored papers.

Figs often come in small, round baskets; place them back of the rows of packages.

Use packages for pyramids wherever convenient.

The bare spots can be filled in with stewing figs heaped in piles.

Neat price-cards can be placed on the fruit, also attractive cards hung in the window. They will attract the attention of the public.

This display is inexpensive, as you are only using your stock, which, no doubt, would be stored away in the wareroom.

Cut Out Cheap Corn Entirely.

Well-known Packers' Representative Contends That If Packers Would Stop Packing Third and Fourth Grade Corn the Market Would Take on Health That It Can Never Otherwise Acquire.

A well-known Eastern representative of canned goods packers, in discussing the slump which has again overtaken the canned goods market, expressed the opinion, which is worthy of consideration, that the market for canned corn would never recover much strength until the packers ceased to pack third and fourth-grade stuff.

This broker claimed that if each packer would confine himself to one grade of corn, that the best he can get; or to a first grade and at most a good second grade, the market would instantly assume a healthy tone, which is impossible under present conditions. The present method is to pack the finest grade under the best label, a second grade under another label, and sometimes third and fourth grades under still other labels. The third and fourth grades are usually packed only to sell. The packer, if he is a good packer, is not proud of them, and wherever he can refuses to put his name on the label. The stuff comes on the market, in a great horde, and because it has little or no value it has no bottom to its price and inevitably depresses the market for the better corn.

The same broker contended that the difference in cost to the consumer, between say the second-grade corn and the fourth, would be so small that any person who could afford the fourth could afford the second. As a matter of fact, a difference of 12 cents per dozen, which is a substantial difference in corn, would mean only 1 cent per dozen. This means, if true, that there would be no loss of trade, and no injustice to anybody, by cutting out the inferior grades.

Polished Coffee Seized and Burned.

The case of the eighty-four bags of coffee seized by the Federal Government several months ago on the ground that it was polished and coated in violation of law was tried on Monday last and ended in conviction. This is the end of a case that was begun in January, when District Attorney Tillman received information to the effect that a shipment of coffee was expected from New Orleans, the consignees being Orr, Jackson & Co. He immediately seized the consignment. M. C. Albrech, a member of the Bureau of Chemistry at Washington, who made an examination of the coffee, testified in court that by chemical tests he found the coffee to be coated or polished with a solution of lead chromate, a very poisonous substance. He said that while coffee so treated might be drunk for a week or longer without producing apparent ill effects, if its use were continued it would have a very poisonous effect. Judge McCall sentenced all the eighty-four bags of "coffee" to be taken out by the United States Marshal and burned to a crisp. Orr, Jackson & Co. would lay no claim to the coffee, and have never paid the freight on it, although they have kept the consignment stored on orders of the Government. The coffee was sent to them by Westfeldt Bros., a New Orleans firm, and although the latter has been notified of the proceedings pending on account of an alleged violation of the pure food laws, Westfeldt Bros. have not claimed to be owners of the consignment. Consequently there was no claimant for the coffee, and the eighty-four bags had to fight a losing battle alone. It is estimated that if the coffee were of the grade it appears to be, the entire consignment would be worth about $1,000.

Both Perfect and Uniform

Gurnse Butter has two qualities that we talk about a good deal—1, superfine quality; and 2, reliability and uniformity.

It's hard to say which the grocer thinks more important in butter, but if there is any difference we believe that uniformity is the more important. Every grocer knows how dangerous to his business it is to have the second shipment of butter poorer than the first.

But with Gurnse Butter it isn't necessary to choose between these two good qualities, for Gurnse Butter embodies both. It is the finest dairy butter possible to produce, inspected rigidly at every stage, and it keeps that way always.

You and your customers can handle one pound of Gurnse with perfect confidence that it will be exactly like that other pound that suited perfectly.

Packed in 30 and 50-pound boxes—pound and half pounds—34 cents.

Prices subject to market change.

Quaker Oats Co. Thinks Grocers Should Sell at Ten Cents and Says It Will Help Them.

Chicago, Ill., April 20, 1908.
Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—The question of the retail selling price of advertised rolled oats packages has been much discussed by retail grocers of late. The most observant retailers take the view that at 12 cents per package the consumption has been greatly curtailed, yet the grocers' cost would not reasonably warrant a price of 10 cents.

In the large cities most of the grocers have found the demand of the consumer for a 10-cent price too great an obstacle to surmount without loss of volume and consequently are doing business without profit.

As a measure of relief to the retail grocer, as well as in recognition of the consumers' demand, we have decided to defer no longer the action we promised the trade in December, when our advance was made, to restore the 10-cent basis as soon as possible; therefore we have to-day reduced the price on the regular size Quaker Oats so that it may with profit be sold at 10 cents.

There is no decrease in the cost of materials to warrant this reduction. Oats remain very high and milling quality more difficult to obtain than ever in our experience. Our sole reason for the step is to make our goods more satisfactory to the dealer; to increase the consumption and consequently by increasing the volume also increase the profit to the trade.

The reduction is effective only in territory north of Tennessee and North Carolina and east of Colorado and Wyoming.

This early advice is given you under the belief that the matter is of such importance to your readers that you will want to make editorial comment in your next number.

Yours truly,
THE QUAKER OATS CO.,
C. C. Coldren, Assistant Sales Manager.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XXXVI.—Trading Business Ideas.

Get acquainted with your horse before trading him off, he may be a good one.

Ideas come to some people so rapidly that they cannot possibly take care of them unless they have a big staff of assistants. The writer knows one bright, brainy fellow who has ideas come to him this way and almost every day he has a new one. He is kept poor by them, just because he starts in on one today and trades it off for a better one to-morrow, and so on through the year. In the course of a single year he probably starts to make use of at least a dozen exceptionally good ideas, along with the more ordinary, any one of which would be a great success if worked out in a systematic manner. If he would just get one of these ideas so fastened in his brain as to prevent another one from gaining an entrance he would have been rich long ago, but the new one always looks the best, and as a result the old one, which is just beginning to get a trial, is neglected and dies of the neglect.

The man who only has one idea at a time and sticks so close to it that nothing can separate him from it is more likely to make a success of life than the man who has a fine new idea every morning for breakfast and trades it off before supper without giving it a chance to succeed. F. A. P.

ALL you have to do is to take a profit of 33⅓ per cent. on the trade we send you. That's just as easy as it seems. Heavy advertising starts your customers using "FORCE" and its quality keeps them using it.

You have to "talk up" the other breakfast foods, wasting your time, worrying your head, tiring your customer. What's the use of that when you can sell "FORCE" without talking?

The Reason We Sell More

¶ Lots of manufacturers claim that they can force you to sell their goods by creating a demand with the consumer. We know that "unwilling service is never good service"; so instead of trying to force you to sell Mother's Oats we are making it worth your while to push them, by giving you an extra profit in the shape of the coupons which net you a profit of ½ cent each on all redeemed. When you induce your customers to take Mother's Oats instead of some other brand you have the satisfaction of knowing that you have tied them to you by giving them an oat product which is better than anything else of the kind on the market.

The Protection of Creditors.

The tendency toward preventing dishonest retail dealers from defrauding their creditors by fake sales and transfers of their property is at the present time very marked in all sections. The bulk sales laws which have been passed in about thirty States have helped in this movement, which has also been helped in other ways.

The courts almost invariably assist an honest creditor of this class to obtain his rights if it can be done. A case which supplies a good illustration has just been decided in the Philadelphia courts. This case has been dragging along in the Philadelphia courts since 1904. For some years previous to 1904, H. Berg was in the retail business at 608 South Third street. On January 4, 1904, he sold his entire stock to one Harris Aaronson for $850. At that time he was owing a little over $500 to the Philadelphia wholesale trade, his creditors being four of the larger jobbers. One of these, learning of the sale, called on him immediately for settlement of his account, but he refused to pay him or his other creditors, claiming that he had made over most of the money to his brother-in-law, in settlement of a claim of $500. The jobber referred to at once swore out a warrant for Berg's arrest, charging him with selling, removing and secreting goods with intent to defraud his creditors, and the matter was placed in the hands of the District Attorney's office. Berg was arrested and held in $800 bail for court. The case was postponed from time to time, but finally came to trial a short time ago. Berg was convicted and sentenced to four months in the county jail. The prosecutors in this case were several times offered a settlement of 50 per cent. if they would withdraw the charges of fraud, this offer having been made as recently as a week previous to the trial, but they refused settlement, preferring to lose in this particular case rather than surrender the principle for which they were contending—that it was possible to convict a dealer in a criminal prosecution on the charge of disposing of his goods with intent to defraud his creditors.

Question: G., Pa.—A sold B a property by signing a paper like this, viz:—

> I have this day sold to B a certain house and lot for $2,150; one hundred and fifty dollars to be paid in cash, the balance to be paid every three months as agreed.

A took B's check for $150. A's wife was dissatisfied and would not sign the deed, and B would not annul the sale, claiming he had already sold the property to C, who wants the property or damages. Can either B or C get the property, and have they cause for damages?

The inside circumstances in the case are these inferred:—

A has several properties and a large family of grown-ups; is 80 years old; went to B to purchase lumber for repairs. The question of selling got up between them; the property he sold is worth $3,500 or more and B knew there would be trouble about that sale and at once had deed of transfer made the same day at $3,000 to C, but the consummation was stalled when they took the deed to A's wife to sign. A can't explain why he sold it. All went so quick is his only excuse.

Answer.—A's transaction with B did not in any sense amount to a sale; it was simply an agreement or memorandum of sale. B, the purchaser, was charged with knowledge that A's deed would not convey good title unless Mrs. A joined in it. He therefore took an undue and improper risk when, before obtaining Mrs. A's consent, he made his alleged sale to C. Had he been properly prudent he would have gotten his deed, legally executed both by A and A's wife; then he could have sold to C and conveyed something. As it was, he conveyed something which he did not have; he had only the promise of it.

There was, however, a valid contract of sale between A and B, which contract A violated when he found himself unable to deliver a good deed. He is therefore liable to B for all damages which B sustained through A's breach. Whether B is entitled to count in his damages the loss on his bargain with C, however, is very doubtful, for, as explained, that transaction was prematurely entered into. So that while B has a nominal right of action against A he will probably have to prove damages other than these before he can recover anything.

If C entered into a bona fide agreement with B to buy the A property, C unquestionably has also a right of action against B for the latter's breach.

Question: A. F., Philadelphia, Pa.—I have a customer who has run a bill on me for $29.75. Said customer has misrepresented himself to me. He told me he was working for the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, which I find is not so. His wife also went to the superintendent to tell me he was working there, which he refused to do. Would you kindly tell me if I can hold this person for receiving goods under false pretenses?

Answer.—The proper answer to this question depends upon some facts which are not disclosed. If the delinquent customer in the above case came to this correspondent when working for no one—a man without an income and without financial resource—and by representing that he was an employee of the railroad company obtained credit which if the truth had been known he would not have gotten, then he is guilty of false representations and a warrant can issue. The wife's trick would be strong evidence of fraudulent intent. But if the representation was simply a lie, and the delinquent, while not working for the railroad, was actually working for somebody, there is no false representation in a criminal sense.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

THE TEA QUESTION AGAIN.

Selling tea isn't as hard as some clerks imagine. Half the battle is getting sufficient confidence from the customer to give you her first order. Don't talk a "pound." Sixty cents, or even half a dollar, is twice as much money as hosts of people think of spending at a time for tea. You ought to know this. While you're taking an order next week say, "Mrs. Smith, we have put on sale two new teas, a black and a mixed, that the manager wants you to try. He requests that you merely purchase a quarter of a pound for 13 cents. May I enter that amount on your bill? If so, I am to report it to-night." Keep this up all week.

THE FURNITURE POLISH

called Liquid Veneer must be sold. Five cents' commission on the 25-cent size, and 10 cents on the 50-cent size. We believe this is a good thing—we further believe that it would be a good thing to move it. Get posted on what it will do. Read the circulars.

SALAD DRESSING.

Lettuce is coming in now in fine shape and very reasonable in price. We sold five barrels Saturday. You forget to speak about the dressing. Now's the time. We're overstocked on Alpha and Royal. Have a nice, clean, fresh-looking bottle of both beside you this week. Lay a couple on top of half a dozen heads of lettuce right on the counter and watch the effect—watch the result of "silent suggestion."

BE READY.

It's a great thing to be ready. It spells success. But be ready for your morning customer. Not a word of idle talk to your brother clerk. Not a minute must you devote to stock arrangement while the customer is waiting. Just "be ready." It's a compliment to her when you promptly drop the work in hand.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

EVERY ONE A GOOD CHANCE.

No. 313.—In heart of Philadelphia's most aristocratic residential district. Store 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, half cash, balance monthly. The people who buy at this store are the promptest payers in the city. Stock $2,000-$3,000, net profits 20 per cent., owing to the fact that customers are mostly wealthy. Owner going to the country and will sell at inventory. This store is a little old-fashioned in some respects, but is thoroughly prosperous and can be very greatly increased.

No. 314.—In Ocean County, N. J. Summer resort, but good winter population also. General store, 40 x 75 feet. Doing $30,000 yearly, half cash, balance strict 30 days. Present stock $5,000, but can be reduced to $2,500 without impairing business. Uses two teams. Net clear 10 per cent. Balance of building divided into flat and offices, profitably rented. Owner retiring from business and will sell at inventory.

No. 324.—In North Philadelphia, store 16x42 feet. Does $300 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock $750. Uses one team. Clear net profits 12 per cent. Good house connected, for sale or rent. Owner retiring from business. Price inventory.

No. 326.—In West Philadelphia, store 17x32 feet. Does $350 to $450 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Stock $400 to $500. One team. Good house connected. Net profits 15 per cent. Owner retiring from grocery business, and will sell at Inventory. This store has been established 20 years, and is solidly prosperous.

No. 329.—In Germantown, Philadelphia. Does $300 weekly, all cash. Stock about $1,000. No team. Nets clear 10 per cent. This business sells only groceries. The meat department is rented to another dealer on profitable terms, which make advertiser's rent very low. Owner has other business which takes his time. Price Inventory.

No. 333.—General store in Mifflin County, Pa. An extremely strong proposition. Size 30x100 feet. Business about $4,000 per month, 40 per cent. cash. Stock $6,000, which can be reduced considerably. Uses two teams. Business thoroughly profitable, netting about $5,000 per year. Owner in poor health and wants to retire to country place. Will make very favorable terms. Low price for fixtures. Stock at inventory, with proper allowance for everything not strictly up to the mark. The business can be very decidedly increased.

No. 334.—In West Philadelphia, size 16x44. Does $375 weekly, three-fourths cash. Stock $1500 but can be reduced to $1000. Clear slightly more than 10 per cent. above everything. Dwelling connected for sale or rent. Owner going into manufacturing and will sell at inventory. Fullest investigation.

No. 336.—On best business street of West Philadelphia. Store 16x27 feet. Does $150 to $200 weekly, all cash. Stock about $700. No team delivery. Clears 20 per cent. as expenses are low. Good dwelling connected for sale or rent. Good reasons which will be fully explained. Price Inventory.

No. 341.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and delicatessen. Size 20x30 feet. Does $300 weekly. All cash. Stock $2,000, but can be reduced to $1,300. Push cart delivery. Net profits, 15 per cent., as family run store. Established 12 years. Owner must sell as death compels him to assume another business. Price inventory. Fixtures will run about $1,500, but can be reduced to $1,100. Amount required, around $3,000. Cash or good security. Dwelling.

No. 345.—In West Philadelphia. Meats and provisions. Size 15x28 feet. Does about $11,000, three-fourths cash. Mostly sells meats, so stock only averages $250 No team. Actual net profits, 20 per cent. Owner wishes to change business, for reasons which will be explained. Price Inventory. Take around $800. Dwelling.

No. 346.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats, provisions. Size, 16 x 30. Does $200 to $250 weekly, three-quarters cash, balance weekly. Stock about $500. Push cart delivery. Net profits 12 per cent. Low rent and expenses. Satisfactory reasons for selling. Price inventory. For stock and fixtures about $1,200 required. This is an extremely strong small proposition.

No. 347.—In high class part of West Philadelphia. Meats, provisions, canned goods, etc. Size, 22x60. Does $500 weekly, all cash. Stock $300 to $350. One team. Clear net profits 15 per cent. Rent, $30 monthly. Pay roll, $21 weekly. No real estate. Owner wants to get in other business and will sell at inventory. Cost about about $1,000, without team.

No. 353.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and provisions. Size, 16 x 30 feet. Does $14,000 yearly, two-thirds cash. Dwelling connected. Stock, $1,000 to $1,500. No team. Net profits, 10 per cent. Owner wants to go further into suburbs and will sell at inventory or lump sum of $1,500. Splendid chance for adding meats.

No. 356.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 36 feet. Does $400 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Dwelling connected, if wanted. Stock about $800. Uses one team. Nets clear 10 per cent. Owner needs a rest and his eyesight is failing. Will sell at inventory. Will take about $1,000.

No. 360.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 17 x 30 feet. Does $400 to $500 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock, $600. Owner takes out $40 weekly, beside living expenses. Uses one team. Good dwelling attached. Owner is going into the saloon business and will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,000. This is a splendid money-making proposition.

No. 362.—Near Tioga, Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 20 x 30 feet. Does $125 weekly, half cash. Stock, $1,000. Clean net profits, 15 per cent. Dwelling connected for sale. Owner has Government position and cannot give attention. Will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,500 for stock and fixtures and around $2,500 for the property. Full investigation.

No. 363.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Store 17 x 38 feet. Does $17,000 to $18,000, two-thirds cash. Stock $500. Net profits 10 per cent. Good 10-room dwelling connected for sale. Uses one team. Owner has seashore hotel and wants to give it his whole time. Take $2,500 on the property and inventory for stock and fixtures. Established 10 years ago and a very successful business.

No. 364.—In good part of West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and produce. Store 20 x 60 feet. Does $20,000 to $25,000, half cash, balance weekly. Stock $700 to $800. Net profits 10 per cent. Owner sick and ordered to give up work by physician. Will sell at sacrifice in order to get out quickly. This store can be bought for about $,400, which is far below inventory.

In all of these the cause of selling is good, and the fullest investigation courted. Every one paying.

WHERE the GLASS JAR COMES IN

The glass jar in which Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa—and that only—is packed offers the entering wedge to a sale, because it is unusual.

No woman ever saw cocoa packed in glass before; the sight is novel; she asks about it, and if you help a little, she buys.

Bought once, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa will always be bought again, for it has a flavor which has never been successfully imitated. Our exclusive making process removes the bad, develops the good, and the result is the smoothest, most delicious drinking cocoa on the market.

Croft & Allen Co.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNA.

What Washing Powder Do You Sell?

Some old and half-forgotten brand, sold only because you always have sold it?

Or Snow Boy Washing Powder, a powder made of pure soap and other cleansing ingredients, quickly cleaning everything water won't hurt; containing none of the skin-eating alkalies that some of the old brands do; carrying beautiful and high-grade premiums to your customers?

There is room in your store for a good washing powder, but be sure that you handle the best.

An Extra Salesman Free of Cost

DO you know that the tremendous advertising we are doing in consumers' publications really amounts to an extra outside salesman for you? The chance is there isn't a single one of your customers who doesn't take some publication. If it's a good one we're likely in it, persuading that customer that Van Camp's Pork and Beans are the best of all, even better than home-baked; inspiring them to buy; placing our case before them in the strongest possible way.

And our case is your case, for you can get these sales. More, we've seen to it that you can get them at a profit which averages as well as the profit you make on everything.

The finest baked beans and the finest baked bean proposition.

Van Camp Packing Co. Indianapolis Indiana

"GET SOME"

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

The Pressing & Orr Co.
NORWALK, OHIO

Like to Eat Husks?

A meal of corn hulls would be like a meal of husks, and yet every brand of corn but Winorr cans the hulls with the kernels. Naturally not as bad as the hulls alone, but it's common sense that it takes away some of the goodness.

A special process we have removes the hulls from the corn we afterward pack under the brand Winorr. The result is a brand of unequalled tenderness, succulence and deliciousness. Try this on your trade.

We also pack a full line of finest quality Berries and Vegetables, moist and condensed Mince Meat, Catsup and Salad Dressing.

We are the largest canners of Sauer Kraut in the United States.

You Are the One That Gets Hurt

When you sell your customers a low-priced coffee. You are taking chances unless it's ARIOSA, because it is very difficult to get a good quality of coffee at a low price and yet have the flavor always the same.

You can't afford to take chances. We buy in larger quantities than any five concerns in the country, and we can afford to give quality and make a price that nobody can duplicate.

It Made No Difference to Us

No gelatine sold in this country was less affected by the Federal Food Law than Chalmers'.

Our brands complied with the legal standard even before there was one. How could they help it? They were simply unsophisticated gelatine, made of pure unadulterated calves' stock and spring water. There was nothing to change about them, nothing to alter in any way.

We take a just pride in the fact that while the Federal Food Law caused some manufacturers to completely transform their business, it made no more difference to us than if it had never been passed.

Two styles—granulated and shredded.

The GREAT Ramly

Is the one spelled R-A-M-L-Y, the finest Turkish cigarette .ever made to sell for 10 cents. So good, other cigarettes are made to look like it, so they will sell on the Ramly's reputation.

If you want to give your customers an ideal smoke, sell them the Ramly. You won't have to tell them about it the second time—they'll ask for it.

Vita's Chance Has Come

Vita Norwegian Sardines are the tastiest, most delicious sardines imported. They always have been, but they have never had the sale they ought to have, because French sardines got in first.

This year French sardines are almost out of the market, and the chance for Norwegian sardines has come. Give the Vita brand just a little push and you'll have a sale for it that will stay with you, even after the French sardine comes back.

Look At It and Taste It

The minute you see Nicelle Olive Oil you feel sure it's a high-grade article. The package is unique and exclusive—you can't associate poor goods with it.

Taste Nicelle Oil and you know it's high grade. Nowhere else have you met that rich smoothness, that delicate yet penetrating olive flavor.

Women have told us repeatedly that their salad dressing came quicker and better with Nicelle Oil than with any other brand they ever tried.

Give it a chance for your own good.

The Grocer's Dirty Job Made Clean

We don't have to tell you what a dirty bother it is to draw oil or gasoline for your customers. How impossible it is to put a measure under a faucet, turn the faucet, fill the measure and empty it into the receptacle without soiling your hands. We have done away with every one of the disagreeable features and made it just as easy and as clean a job to fill an order for oil or gasoline as it is to weigh out sugar or coffee.

We have the finest and most complete up-to-date line of pumps and tanks for oil and gasoline that the human brain ever devised. You will find our booklet on this subject one of the most interesting and instructive things you ever read. We'll send it to you as soon as you ask for it.

No Friends Among the Wheelwrights

Wheelwrights don't think much of the "J. M." delivery wagon; it doesn't make enough money for them. No wagon pays fewer visits to the repair shop, or makes its visits shorter.

The most celebrated delivery wagon made—the best wagon ever built for the grocery trade. Strong as iron, yet easy-running; finest steel tires, and wheels from second-growth hickory.

YOUR TRADE WITH

Clicquot Club Ginger Ale

People who taste it once don't wait until the next summer to get thirsty again. They want more right away; they want some all the time; they keep buying and you keep selling it all year. We make it from sparkling sterilized water, under the most cleanly conditions, in our big sanitary factory at Millis, Mass.

It beats the best imported as a seller, and pays you better.

Don't postpone good profit until summer—stock up NOW.

Hams and Bacon Are in Demand

Are you giving your trade the best values for their money? You can easily do so by giving the people what they want and that is which are plump, have short shanks and round butts, are sweet, being sugar cured; mild, because they are not old; and of fine flavor, being smoked a nice, bright color, which is only possible by using hickory wood.

They are sold by the leading retail grocers in Philadelphia, having the most select and exacting trade.

Burk's "Butternut Bacon"

is the only substitute for "Crown Brand" Hams. It is selected from corn-fed hogs, specially cured with granulated sugar—mild and of exquisite flavor and taste.

It is put up in narrow strips, strung with white cord, cut absolutely square, making any waste impossible; wrapped in highly glazed and parchment paper and embellished on two sides with an attractive blue and white label.

A red seal is attached to the cord, stating the specific merits of this bacon, which is also known to the trade as the "5-B" Bacon, because of its name.

Pure Lard

to be at its best must contain all the original natural oils. Many brands of lard are "pure," but lack richness because these oils have been extracted to increase the manufacturer's profits.

Burk's Lard

is strictly pure and contains all the properties of the wholesome hog fat and nothing else.

Louis Burk

GIRARD AVE. and THIRD ST., PHILADELPHIA

On the Streets at Night

You occasionally get on the street at night, and every now and again you stop before the brilliant windows of the department stores.

What makes them brilliant? The goods displayed? It is the abundant light, under which almost any goods would make a brilliant window. You wouldn't be half so well interested in the window if it wasn't so bright with light.

Apply this logic to your own store. Is it so bright with light that it interests people in the streets at night?

If it isn't we can make it so, very inexpensively.

Food for Thought and Food for the Body

If you are the means of introducing something to your customers which proves to be better than anything of the kind they have ever had before, you not only get their gratitude, but their confidence. If you get these two things you are certain to hold their trade—that's food for thought.

If you recommend Royal Peanut Butter those who try it will find it better food for the body than almost any food product on the market.

The Universal Coupons which come to you with every case are food for the pocket book in the shape of an extra profit.

FIT MATES FOR THE BEST BREAD MADE

After getting all the business on Freihofer's Bread we could possibly take care of, we sighed for other worlds to conquer, and started to make Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels.

These goods are fit mates for Freihofer's Bread, and most grocers know what that is. We have done little or no advertising to consumers for them, preferring to spend that money with the grocer to make him friendly to us and really anxious to sell our goods.

So that every case contains Universal Coupons, which will buy any necessity or luxury a grocer can want.

Make a Specialty of Private Estate Coffee

The nicest, smoothest drinking coffee that has ever been introduced to the trade is Private Estate.

It is the one coffee that you can make a specialty of that will redound to your benefit. It will appeal to every customer who tries it to such an extent that they will never be content to use any other. It is uniquely packed in one-pound burlap bags. Another feature of importance to you is that it carries with it Universal Coupons.

Nothing Like It Has Ever Been Made

This picture represents a floor wax which when properly applied makes wood like new. Grocers can build up a big trade on it because their customers need it—they are buying something of the kind now, and are going to paint stores to get it. If you will put a case of MOORE'S WAX where it can be seen and tell your trade what it will do you will get some money that is going somewhere else now. We are making it worth your while to do a little talking for this product by giving you a generous quantity of Universal Coupons with each case. You can buy anything you need with these coupons.

As Staple As Sugar

GOOD soap powder is as staple as sugar. If you sell a good brand it is certain to sell in sufficient quantity to make itself profitable.

Soap powder would sell even better if some manufacturers hadn't used a lot of harsh alkalies that ate off the skin.

Snow Boy Washing Powder is little more than the purest soap, powdered for greater convenience, and rounded out with some other innocent and effective ingredients. It is a safe and splendid cleanser.

And the premiums your customers get with it are just as good.

Cooking Canned Corn

The succulence of canned corn, of course, depends in a measure on the quality of the corn in the beginning; but it depends as much, if not more, on the cooking.

ONARGA COUNTRY GENTLEMAN corn is cooked by the new automatic process which cooks the edges and the center equally, evenly and just enough. The old processes, to completely cook the center, always overcooked the edges.

That is why ONARGA corn is uniformly white and uniformly tender. You'll see the instant you open a can.

This Tells the Tale

A product which has been on the market fifty-eight years is a product which has stood the hardest of all tests—the test of time. "Knight's Cooking Extracts" is a phrase familiar to man, woman and child, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is easy to tell why; no housewife ever had a bottle go back on her and no housewife ever will. Good extracts must be on your shelves. Grocers, if you sell Knight's Extracts we need say nothing more to you; if you don't, we want one order from you—we are sure of more. You are certain of their absolute purity and a good profit.

Dealers will appreciate this for two reasons:

1st. It will tremendously increase sales.

2nd. It is another evidence that the Quaker Oats Company acts in good faith with the trade; this is an early fulfillment of our promise made last December.

The price of oats does not warrant this reduction and we may not be able to continue the low prices

The profitable goods for you are the largely advertised brands that bring repeating sales. Don't tie up your money in goods that are not advertised

Written for the "Grocery World."

Defends the Jobber Who Refused to Sell Retail Grocers' Association

Anonymous Correspondent Thinks Jobber Referred to Last Week Needs Defence. Says He Subsequently Admitted there was No Reason to Refuse the Sale. Contends that a Seller has the Right to Choose His Customers. May Not a Jobber Refuse to Sell a Competitor?

After reading the article in last week's "Grocery World" regarding the Philadelphia wholesale grocer who at first refused to sell goods to the Retail Grocers' Association, it occurred to me, in the interest of the jobber referred to, that something ought to be said in his defense. I know what house was meant, and am familiar to some extent with the transaction.

I know it to be a fact that within twenty-four hours after the incident referred to the head of the jobbing house mentioned stated that he knew of no reason why an order from the Retail Grocers' Association should not be filled. I will also remind you that the order was in the end accepted and the goods shipped.

Another thing, you are of course aware that every seller has a right to sell the person he likes and to refuse to sell anyone that he does not wish to sell. Unless I am in error, the "Grocery World" has itself stated, in a recent issue, that that right was inherent in every person. What then is so reprehensible about a jobbing house refusing to sell the Retail Grocers' Association?

Still another thing. The Retail Grocers' Association is competing with every jobber in Philadelphia. Why should a jobber furnish it with ammunition to shoot himself with? Would not that in itself be sufficient reason for refusing to sell the Retail Grocers' Association?

FAIR PLAY.

Phila., Pa., May 2, 1908.

NOTE.—The above communication came to the "Grocery World" anonymously, but it is still given space, since it concerns a vital matter and is written in a fair tone.

The fact that the jobber referred to in last week's article the next day admitted the entire absence of any reason for his attitude of the day before, simply proves that in the end his intelligence overcame his selfishness. That he should have refused or hesitated at all shows his real attitude, which was to keep the Retail Grocers' Association from getting any goods whatever if he could, and thus to destroy it.

Unquestionably the jobber had an abstract right to refuse to sell the association. He had an abstract right to refuse to sell anybody. He had no logical right, however, to refuse to sell the association because it was the association. If the retailers' organization had been undesirable because of small purchasing power or weak credit, it would have been another matter. But to preach one day that the association should buy through jobbers, and the next to try to prevent it from buying through jobbers, is to do a thing which frankly violates the logical decencies. That spite actually did figure in the incident is shown by the fact that when the order was finally accepted, it was childishly charged to the broker instead of the association.

Is a jobber justified in refusing to sell his competitor? By the custom of the trade, no. Jobbers sell each other every day. Further, since this phase of the case did not strike the jobbing house in question, it scarcely need be discussed here.—ED.

New Freight Rule Hurts Small Buyers.

Railroad Advances the Minimum Freight Rate for New Jersey With the Double Result of Causing Larger Purchasing and Diverting Some Trade from Philadelphia to Camden Jobbers.

A new freight regulation by the Pennsylvania Railroad is reacting rather severely upon retail grocers throughout New Jersey who buy goods in small quantities.

Up to the making of the new regulation the minimum freight rate to points in New Jersey was 12 cents, while the minimum to Pennsylvania points was 25 cents. The railroad decided to make the rates for both States uniform, and the minimum rate for New Jersey was therefore advanced to 25 cents. At once a rule of the New Jersey Railroad Commission which prevents a higher minimum rate than 12 cents was brought to bear, and this had the effect of restricting the new railroad regulation to interstate traffic, over which the State Railroad Commission had no jurisdiction. That is to say, that if a Philadelphia jobber sends a small shipment of goods to a point in New Jersey the consignee will be obliged to pay a minimum freight rate of 25 cents. If a Camden jobber shipped the same goods to the same man, the freight under the State Commission's ruling would be only 12 cents.

This advance is seriously affecting the small retail buyers of the State. Considerable business has been diverted to Camden jobbers, but in other cases it has simply caused retailers to buy in larger quantities, thus making larger shipments and practically getting a lower rate. A shipment of about 350 pounds is now about the smallest order for which a minimum rate of 25 cents is a fair charge.

For a General Credit Information System.

Plan Brought Out at Philadelphia Credit Men's Meeting for a System by which Merchants May Exchange Data as to Customers' Financial Standing.

There is a plan on foot, probably with Philadelphia as the centre, by which a general credit system will be established, giving to the merchant in one town the right to call upon the merchant in another for information regarding the financial standing of a customer.

The matter was brought out at the quarterly meeting of the Philadelphia branch of the National Association of Credit Men, which was held in this city on Monday. Marcus M. Marks, of New York, president of the National Association of Clothiers, who spoke on "Credit Co-operation," told of the rather haphazard manner in which merchants co-operate along this line at present and advocated the extension of a national system, whereby a merchant in any city in the country may call upon a merchant in another city, however distant, for information as to reliability and standing of a prospective customer, thus avoiding many pitfalls and swindles. This plan is to be looked into, and if possible adopted.

Apricot Holders Badly Stung.

Packers Name Future Prices Little More Than Half Spot Prices. Spot Holders Have Already Made Large Concessions to Clean Up Before Season Ends.

Shippers of California apricots have made a move during the week which goes even further than anything done before to prevent Eastern holders of evaporated apricots from getting out whole. They have named prices on future apricots which are little more than half the prices now being asked for spot cots.

The prices named by practically all the packers are 8 cents for standards, 8½ cents for choice, 9 cents for extra choice, and 9½ cents for fancy. This is against last year's opening prices of around 18 to 20 cents. The holders of spot apricots had already made a heavy sacrifice in order to move their goods. Apricots in the East had been jobbing around 23 to 24 cents. They were not moving, the season was growing late, and prices gradually declined to around 15 to 16 cents. Naturally this price was low compared with former prices, but it is also decidedly high compared with the prices now named for future delivery. From now on, therefore, spot apricots will be bought only when they have to be.

Apricot holders have had the dullest season of their experience. The extremely high prices which the short supply made it necessary to get have been prohibitive and many grocers handled no apricots at all during the season of 1907-08. The prospects for the coming crop are good and if there are no setbacks the production will be large and prices very moderate.

Thinks Retailers Ought to Stop Buying Future Canned Goods

Well-known California Grocer Contends Jobbers and Packers Should Be Made to Carry Bulk of the Stock. As a Rule Retailers Make Nothing from Buying Ahead.

[The following statement, strongly condemning the buying of future canned goods by retail grocers, at least as a general practice, has been prepared by Charles A. Mottaz, of Los Angeles, Cal., second vice-president of the California Retail Grocers' and Merchants' Association. Since conditions are much the same in California as in the East, the opinions expressed are of fairly general application.]

These few lines will simply relate my observation of over twenty years of experience as a grocer. Does it pay to invest capital in futures as a general rule? Is it a good investment? If it is a money making proposition we should advocate and practice future buying—but, on the other hand, if it is simply a burden and a losing scheme—then we should perforce, avoid all future deals.

We will consider futures first as a good investment.

There are certain lines where a careful grocer will notice an upward tendency in prices and by placing an order can take advantage of the market change and save the amount of the advance—but very seldom can the dealer notice the changes in price when the future becomes the present.

The goods I would call to mind now are canned tomatoes, corn and vegetables. This line of canned goods I would call "the curse of grocerydom." It is a line which the retail grocer must of necessity carry as an accommodation to the consumer. There are no profits in handling these goods. Any merchant who would deal exclusively in canned goods would starve to death in short order—and still Mr. Retailer pays more attention to this line of future buying than any other in his business.

We will notice Mr. Grocer reading all the reports of crops, and as he calls it "getting posted" on the outlook for corn and tomatoes, and if reports are not favorable he will almost lose sleep for fear of getting left on his "future" corn and tomatoes. Now, where the profit lies in canned goods of my over twenty years of experience as a dealer I have always failed to see.

When corn and tomatoes sell "future" for about 75 to 85 cents per dozen these same goods are nearly always selling at "3 for 25 cents." This shows a small margin of profit on the face of things, but we have to figure farther. When a merchant buys "future" goods are delivered in October as a rule and must be paid for in November. These goods begin to sell about the first of January.

Mr. Grocer has carried this stock about three or four months. I claim right here the interest on capital, insurance, etc., has more than taken all the profits. Mr. Retailer has carried the load and performed all the labor for the accommodation of the trade.

Why, we ask?

Because it is the custom, and a very good one, for Mr. Jobber—and we (the grocers) find no fault.

It is very nice for the wholesalers. We as retailers would do the same thing if we could find the donkey to carry the burden.

Mr. Salesman will very politely ask the merchant for his future order on canned goods (corn, tomatoes and canned vegetables), and this in the early spring of the year, as they have to give the canners an estimate so as to insure the full requirements of the trade being packed. Reports come of a bad frost in the corn belt. The prices will surely advance by leaps and bounds in a short time, as the prospects are only for half a crop, and furthermore, Mr. Jones and Mr. Smith, the next corner grocers, have placed large orders last week. as there are only a few days before a large advance. The placing of "future" orders being the custom, the order is forthcoming. Mr. Salesman is satisfied and Mr.

YOUR "NEXT" ORDER

How, at this time, are you to KNOW you are buying right all the goods you handle besides groceries?

Though that general break in prices which some have "seen coming" for months past still declines to arrive—you know that "scattering" breaks must continue to occur every now and then in this period of general adjustment.

To whom would a manufacturer in immediate need of ready money more naturally go first then to us—possessed, as he knows, of FOUR big houses and a monthly catalogue through which almost immediately an offering can be laid before all the merchants of America.

In consequence, will you not KNOW you are buying right if you keep informed on the contents of each freshly revised issue of our monthly catalogue?

And right now, to be fair to yourself, don't place your "next" order without KNOWING the many price reductions in our May catalogue.

Grocer's mind is relieved of a great burden.

Now, let us follow this order further. Have the wholesalers ever advanced the prices on this line of goods? Not to my knowledge unless there was a shortage, and if there is an actual shortage Mr. Jobber simply sends a notice to the trade "only 40 or 60 per cent. of deliveries," and it's final. No claims or nothing else recognized. Then there is an advance in prices after all merchants get their supply.

Now then, has Mr. Retailer ever advanced the prices. Not in years.

The retail price is established and it is almost impossible to change it, and Mr. Retailer goes right on buying "futures" from year to year, because Mr. Wholesaler always brings it up at the right time—and is shrewd enough to keep this good old custom in vogue.

There are several excuses. Mr. Jobber is ever ready to give the first one—"they want to make an estimate for the canner."

No one ever thought of ever making an estimate for the grower. He has to plant his crop, cultivate it and take his chance to make or lose in disposing of it.

Why not let Mr. Canner take his chance of disposing of his product, and in all justice let Mr. Wholesaler carry the stock until Mr. Retailer needs it.

Another excuse Mr. Jobber has is this: If we have to carry this large stock of canned goods, store them, pay insurance, etc., they will cost the trade more. Mr. Wholesaler is better prepared to store goods and can do it cheaper than any retailer, and it would be a blessing if the price would advance so as to stop this "3 for 25 cents" proposition for all time to come for Southern California and elsewhere.

One small advantage the retailer has in carrying a large stock of canned goods is the display in his store, but whether it will pay as an advertisement depends on the location.

It has been frequently claimed that most retailers carry too much stock and the careful dealer who aims to do the largest amount of business with the smallest stock pays his bills promptly; takes all the discounts possible; keeps close tab on every detail of his business; weighs, counts, gauges and measures everything he receives and quits worrying about his future orders is surely on the right track and will get results in the end.

Food Warnings From Michigan.

Several Well-known Proprietary Brands Which Have Not Stood the Test of Michigan Laws. Many Not Properly Labeled.

The Michigan Dairy and Food Department has sent the "Grocery World" a copy of its latest bulletin reporting by name a number of proprietary brands of food products which have not stood the test of analyses by the Michigan State chemists. Many of these brands are well known to retailers generally, and that they should have been found wanting in one State necessarily constitutes a warning for dealers who do business in other States:—

New Sugar Refinery Opens Next Week.

Charles N. Warner, president of the Warner Sugar Refining Co., stated during the week that the company's plant at Edgewater, N. J., will commence operations next week. The opening of this plant has been delayed for some time owing to the inability of the company to obtain electrical machinery. The capacity of the works will be 3,000 barrels per day, although at the outset the output will amount to 1,000 barrels.

What Is and Is Not Mocha Coffee

Federal Food and Drug Board Rules That Only Coffee Coming From Yemen, Arabia, Can Be Sold as Mocha. Consul Says That Is the Only Coffee Sold in India as Mocha Now.

The Federal Food and Drug Board sends the "Grocery World" a copy of Food Inspection Decision No. 91, covering "The Labeling of Mocha Coffee." The text is as follows:—

In Food Inspection Decision 82, the Department has indicated its views with respect to the restrictions which it is necessary to place upon the sale of coffees coming from the Dutch East Indies, particularly with respect to such coffees as are known under the name of "Java" coffee.

Among the coffees largely sold upon the American market are those which go by the name of "Mocha." Because of the commercial value of the true Mocha bean, it becomes necessary to indicate the restrictions which must be placed upon the coffees put upon the market and sold under the name of "Mocha."

This matter has been fully investigated and valuable information obtained through the Department of State and from the consul and consular agent in those districts where the true Mocha coffee is grown and whence it is shipped to America and other parts of the world.

The following quotations are taken from the report submitted to the Department of State from the consular agent at Aden under date of January 3, 1908:—

> The Mocha coffee is produced in that district of southern Arabia known as "Yemen." The latter is a strip of territory commencing at a point on the Red Sea a little north of the port of Hodeidah and extending first southeast to the Strait of Bab-el--Mandeb and then east nearly to Aden. Yemen is, with the exception of a narrow fringe of land along the Red Sea, and the Gulf of Aden, rugged and mountainous, embracing innumerable small, elevated valleys of high fertility which are irrigated by waters from the melting snows. This is the coffee district of Arabia.
> The term "Mocha" was bestowed upon "Yemen" coffee early in the last century, when Mocha was the port from which all Arabian coffee was shipped. The formation of huge sandbars in the Red Sea off Mocha, practically barring out all shipping, caused the port to be abandoned, and its trade went to Hodeidah and Aden, the bulk of it going to the latter place.
> As all of the coffee raised in Yeman may properly be called "Mocha" coffee, all coffee shipped from the port of Hodeidah comes within such classification. With regard to that exported from Aden, however, the case is somewhat different. There is a coffee grown in the upland regions of Abyssinia, in the vicinity of Harrar, which is known locally and to the coffee trade of the world as "Longberry" or "Harrar" in contrast with that of Mocha, which is sometimes called the "Shortberry." The colors of both coffees are practically the same, but the Abyssinian product has a raw, rank, leathery odor, while that of the berry grown in Arabia is delicate and agreeable. The Harrar berry is much longer than the Mocha one, besides much less regular in form.
> While a considerable quantity of Abyssinian coffee is brought to Aden for shipment to Europe and to the United States, it is doubtful whether very little of it, if any, is exported as being Mocha coffee, the local merchants as a rule dealing in both grades of coffee and being very careful of the reputation of their houses. In Aden the only way in which a dishonest dealer might adulterate Mocha coffee would be by mixing it with the Abyssinian article. Such a proceeding would be at best but a clumsy fraud and would be readily and rapidly detected. It is safe to say that practically all of the coffees shipped directly from Hodeidah or Aden to the United States and labeled "Mocha" are pure and unadulterated.

The Board is of the opinion that the term "Mocha" as applied to coffee, should be restricted as indicated in the above communication from the consular agent at Aden, that is, to coffee grown in that part of Arabia to the north and east of Hodeidah, known as Yemen.

Food Laws and Prices.

Certain manufacturers of food and drugs, particularly food, are still excusing advances in their prices on the plea that they were caused by the enforcement of Federal and other food laws. The "Grocery World" has some considerable knowledge of the existent conditions, and believes that there is only one way in which the Federal or any other food law has legitimately advanced prices, and that is where the law, as in Java coffee, compelled manufacturers to use the genuine where they had before used the spurious. Naturally this increased the demand for the genuine and the demand advanced the price. In most cases where the food law has been used as a justification for advances, the excuse has been either a pure fake or a confession of previous fraud. Naturally, if a manufacturer has been illegally cheapening his product by the use of an adulterating ingredient, though selling it as pure, the food law has raised his manufacturing cost by compelling him to henceforth buy pure ingredients, and in order to hold his profit intact he raises his selling price. It is perfectly true that such advances were caused indirectly by the Federal food law, but not in the way which some manufacturers would have the trade think.

Products that are now and always have been pure, are not affected by the food law at all, except as stated, by extraordinary demands that the law caused.

The Mocha Coffee Ruling.

The Federal Food and Drug Board's ruling on Mocha coffee, published elsewhere in this issue, will not make much of a ripple on the surface of the coffee trade, for the reason stated by our Consular agent—that "it is safe to say that practically all the coffees shipped directly from Hodeidah or Aden to the United States and labeled Mocha are pure and unadulterated." Present conditions being ideal, therefore, the Board's ruling has nothing to correct so far as import conditions are concerned, and will change nothing. The selling conditions in this country, however, are another story.

The ruling would be practically impotent, however, no matter how much it had to correct, either in this country or any other. The contrast between the limitless scope of the Board's rulings, and its ability to carry them out, is often ridiculous.

Labeling the Consumer's Package.

The grocery trade of Iowa is up in arms over a decision by one of the county judges concerning the sale of products which, while adulterated under the law, may still be sold if properly branded.

The decision was rendered in a case which is typical of conditions existing under every food law. A retail grocer sold compound lard composed of 90 per cent. of hog lard and 10 per cent. of beef fat. The package in which the manufacturers shipped it bore a label which fully revealed the quality of the contents, thus quite relieving the manufacturers from blame.

The retailer sold the lard from this package. Relying upon its label, he used no label whatever upon his own pound, or 2-pound, or half-pound packages. The department arrested him for the sale of unbranded compound lard and won the case. The grocer's defense was that it was enough that the original package was properly branded, but the court demolished this in a very few words. It should be self-evident that however full the disclosure made by the original label, if the consumer never saw it it conveyed no information.

The object of all food laws is to properly inform buyers of adulterated products that they are not receiving pure goods. In a sale from jobber or manufacturer to retailer, that means a label that the retailer must see; in a sale to consumer it means a label that the consumer must see. Manifestly, the only way in which the consumer can be informed of the character of the food he buys is by word of mouth, which is not done once out of ten thousand times, or by a revelation on the package which he gets.

All Food Commissioners do not go so far as this in enforcing their food laws, nevertheless they could legally do so if they chose.

A Low-Priced Year.

From all appearances, this is going to be a difficult year to get high prices for staple food products, and wise holders are already working hard to clean out stock bought at last season's high prices. In California canned goods there is scarcely an Eastern holder but who has more stock than he would like to have. Every one will sell to-day at what he paid; some below. Holders of California asparagus will sell, in many cases, at 75 cents per dozen less than they paid.

Unless unfavorable weather brings a setback, crops of fruits and vegetables in all sections will be larger than for several years. Practically the only important exception up to date is California prunes, where the crop is said to have been heavily damaged. The staple crops are promising everywhere. Peaches, cherries and strawberries, and practically all vegetables, never promised greater abundance, and if the weather lets them alone it seems reasonably sure that the country will see a great plethora of both fruits and vegetables, probably at low prices.

Where fruits and vegetables are cheap and abundant, other staples sell, it is true, but they will not sell at high prices except in cases where they simply cannot be done without. Sugar is an example. The chance is that sugar will rule at high prices all summer, yet the season's consumption bids fair to exceed the record of several years. Sugar must be had.

The chance is that the merchant who keeps on holding high-priced merchandise in the hope of "getting out later" will be disappointed.

"Under New Management"

Many, many times I see this sign conspicuously displayed on some retail business house, not as often on a grocery store as on a saloon or restaurant.

Advertising that "here some man has made a failure—but come in now and see how much better I will be."

This sign makes food for thought.

It almost always means a history of failure, I think. Somebody has gone in there as owner or manager, put in his best licks, but failed to make good.

His successor, unwilling to shoulder the other man's failure, seeks to remove the stigma of it by loudly announcing the change.

Is there anything to business management besides buying right, finding buyers and then selling right? I've heard men contend that that was all and that anybody who gave proper attention to those things would succeed; and I've heard others contend that there was something more.

I believe I agree with the latter. If there is nothing more than those three fundamental elements, why do some men get so much more out of their business than others?

I am inclined to believe that the real manager is born and not made.

Like the real farmer. Some farmers are careful enough, and apparently thorough. Their results are moderately good. Others, with poorer soil and poorer facilities, get twice as much.

They simply seem to coax the stuff through the soil.

As a business manager the Jew is everybody's model. You can give him a poor little business, rocky and rough to the last degree, and the results he will get from it will astound you. Other men may make it go, but the Jew will squeeze from it every drop of success it contains.

You can say what you please about the Jew, he may not even be able to write his name—but he knows business.

What is his secret? What is the secret of any born manager, Jew or Gentile? I verily believe it lies in watching the little things. The things that a lot of us think too trifling for any use.

With a Jew nothing is too trifling for any use. Everything that concerns his business is important. I've heard Jews argue an hour to avoid the payment of interest amounting to $1.50. Meanness, you say? They don't think so—it's business. Business to save every cent they can—business to turn every piece of string to account—business to stop every pinpoint loophole—business to make every item of their business give a good account of itself.

So far as I know every large Hebrew fortune which exists today had its foundation laid that way.

To be sure, a business run that way becomes a great deal heavier burden than a business where one isn't straining after the little things. But, other things being equal, it is almost sure to yield more money.

Of course, to the merchant who puts money last, this argument will not be impressive. Nevertheless, thousands of men who failed could find the main cause of their failure right there.

Another Food Commissioner Sued for Injunction.

The Emrich Vinegar and Pickle Co., of Kansas City, a manufacturer of corn sugar vinegar, commonly called glucose vinegar, has brought an injunction suit in the Circuit Court to restrain R. M. Washburn, State Dairy and Food Commissioner, and M. H. Lamb, his deputy, from confiscating vinegar valued at about $1,000 in the company's factory. Henry L. McCune, presiding judge of the Circuit Court, issued a temporary restraining order. The Commissioner brought suit in Kansas City a week ago against this company and the property was to have been seized Saturday. This will stop the entire proceedings, as the writ is made returnable next October in the Circuit Court of Jackson County.

Cheap Excursions Steal Their Trade.

Merchants of Western Pennsylvania Towns Protest to Railroads Over Low Railroad Fares Which Take Trade to Large Cities. Small News of Local Associations.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Erie, Pa., April 30, 1908.

Secretary W. E. Barrett, of the Oil City Business Men's Exchange, has written associations at Meadville and Franklin, Pa., and Youngstown, Ohio, as follows:—

As secretary of the Oil City Business Men's Exchange, I have been instructed by our president, Mr. S. W. McCuen, to inform you that he has written to the General Passenger Agents of the Lake Shore and Erie Railroads, as follows, to wit:—

Dear Sir:—As the president of the Oil City Business Men's Exchange and vice-president of the Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, it becomes my duty to inform you that the action of your company in running excursions at ridiculously low rates (50 cents for three days' limit from Oil City) from Oil City, Meadville and Youngstown, to Cleveland, is extremely detrimental to the merchants of these towns and tends to take our trade to Cleveland.

I wish to state that we have large organizations in each of these towns and throughout the States and in event of you continuing these objectionable excursions our organization will take such action in regard to freights as will not be beneficial to your company.

Regretting the necessity for the above communication, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,
SAMUEL W. MCCUEN.

Mr. McCuen believes that concerted action on the part of the affected business men could put a stop to these hurtful excursion runs, therefore, as secretary, I ask that you join with us in taking the matter up with the railroads, to the end that buyers may patronize home trade.

A. M. HOWES,
State Secretary.

Hard Times and 25-cent Coffee

Plenty of high-grade families that never did it before are to-day using a 25-cent coffee.

Hard times.

Those who are using our Moco-Mo Coffee find little difference between it and the coffees they've been paying 30 and 35 cents for. For two reasons. One is that it is an exceptionally clever blend, and the other that the uniqueness of the package keeps all the flavor intact for the consumer. If you'll remember, we pack the hot roasted coffee in a paper bag, and next pack the sealed bag in a tight carton. That makes Moco-Mo Coffee absolutely fresh when the consumer opens the package.

The grocer who sells Moco-Mo Coffee as a 25-cent leader will find a particularly ready response for it just now.

Brooklyn Retailers' Association Holds Important Debate on Direct Buying by Large Retailers. Well-known Jobber Talks Against It. Other Side Ably Supported by Brooklyn President.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, May 1, 1908.

A debate on the subject of food manufacturers selling direct to retailers was the feature of the regular semi-monthly meeting held Tuesday evening by the United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn. F. W. Hannahs, of Newark, N. J., the vice-president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, and president of the New York Wholesale Grocers' Association, took the side of the grocery jobbers on the question. The principal speaker for the retailers was B. Bischoff, former president of the Brooklyn Association.

After the other business of the meeting was out of the way, H. Lohman, the president, said that the debate was in order, and he introduced Mr. Hannahs, who was applauded.

Mr. Hannahs spoke extemporaneously for nearly an hour. In beginning he said that he wished his hearers to understand that he made no pretense of gifts of oratory or public speaking, but that he came as a friend of the retail grocers, with whom he had been in close relations all through his business career, and would talk informally as the subject presented itself to his mind, after which he would answer questions, if any were asked. He said in substance:—

"I am one of the wholesale grocers who believe that there is a mutuality of interest with the retailers. Your success means our success. There is lots of talk these days about new ways and methods of doing business, but I have yet to learn of any other real way except to buy and to sell for a little more than you pay. You must add enough to cover the cost of the business and give you a profit. If a man down the street wishes to sell sugar for what it costs him—and that means to sell it at a loss—I am willing that he should have the business.

"If I understand the form of the question before us to-night, it is: Should the retail grocers buy altogether from the jobber or should he have the right to buy from the manufacturer? I say that he has the right to buy where he pleases.

"The real point, I take it, is to determine if the interests of the retailer are conserved by buying from the manufacturer. If I were a retailer I would say, abolish everything that stands in the way of a profit. But the manufacturers cannot sell to all the retailers, even in the city of Brooklyn, much less all through the country. It is a physical impossibility for them to do so. You know the reasons why this is the case. The retail grocer cannot usually buy in sufficient quantities and carry his stock for long periods, as the wholesaler does.

"When the wholesaler pays 90 cents a dozen for tomatoes they cost him that amount with the interest on the money, the warehouse charges and the cost of doing business. I doubt if it pays the wholesale grocer to buy this stock for a year ahead.

"In my opinion, a great mistake of the retailer is in thinking that everything depends on the price that he pays. I say to you that much depends on the selling price of the retailer. He overlooks too often the necessity of selling at a profit.

"The wholesale grocer has a thousand and one items from which you may select what you wish for your customers. That is the reason that the wholesale grocer can do better for you than the manufacturer who has but a single article to offer.

"The day has gone by when a grocer could put his neighbor out of business by selling without a profit or at a loss. The only way to do business is to make a profit. It is not to your real interest for any sugar refiner or other manufacturer to select 10 per cent. of the retail grocers and sell to them for prices below what the other 90 per cent. must pay.

"The wholesale grocer can get along. There is no fear for him. He can make money if he does nothing else but put his money out at interest. So I am not pleading for him. The way for you retailers to get on your job is to make money. That is what all of us are in business for.

"I know the retailer's troubles. I know of the woman who must have an yeast cake delivered the first thing in the morning. My brother has been getting up at 5 A. M., day after day, for years. The troubles with the unreasonable customer and the annoyances of all kinds I know. The retailer must have common sense and horse sense and tact in handling people. He must know his job. He must be able to smile at the many little abuses when his customers are unreasonable. If he can do so, he makes money, and most of you do, as I can see.

"The way to do is to make the consuming public pay for the goods and the accommodation and the exactions. It is a mistake to spend two-thirds of your time in looking after the buying end of the business, in trying to get things cheaper from the wholesaler. You need the time in rubbing elbows with some of the kinds of people to whom I have referred.

"It is impossible for the manufacturer to serve you as the wholesale grocer does. I never knew a man who claimed to buy his goods cheaper than anybody else who did not end wrong. How much more of a man a grocer must be now than twenty-five years ago. Then if a customer brought back twenty-five pounds of flour and said that it was not good, you could just take it into the back room and dump it into the barrel and give the woman twenty-five pounds of the same kind, or perhaps the same twenty-five pounds, and she would go away convinced that she had obtained better flour. Now you must convince the woman that the flour which you gave her in the first place was the very best that could be had. You must have your reasons and be able to give them clearly.

"Even the principal staple articles cannot be distributed direct from the manufacturers to the retailers. An immense amount of capital is required for the distribution, and this can only be done through the wholesalers. The manufacturer cannot take the risks of accounts, the expenses of warehousing and carrying the stock. There is no manufacturer who can distribute through the retailers as economically as through the wholesalers.

"As to the service, there is no comparison between what a manufacturer can give and what the wholesalers are giving you as a matter of course. There is scarcely a day that a wholesaler, or one of his representatives, is not a visitor at your store. You order to-day and your order is filled probably to-morrow. How can the manufacturer do this? The manufacturer with an immense business extending over the entire country cannot attend to the details in each locality.

"Take the item of flour. The wholesaler's salesman selling flour alone would not make his salt. But he sells flour with many other things, and so can afford to do it.

"The wholesale grocer has been more successful in the last five years than ever before because he has given up the idea of trying to do up some other wholesale grocer, and instead, is trying to make money for himself. Do you appreciate the importance of the business in which the retailers play so great a part? In the last few months we know that there has been a depression. But people must have food every day to keep the human fires going. I may make my old clothes do for another year, but I must eat every day, and several times every day. You are the dispensers of the food products that people must have, whether times are good or bad. You have a most honorable business, and I can see no reason why you should not receive a fair profit or why you should sell goods below what they cost you.

"What sense is there in paying $3.50 per hundred pounds for sugar and selling for the same figure? Why sell a can of milk at cost price and lose six or seven cents that it costs you to do business? It is dead wrong to sell without a profit, and you will not do it if you follow the example that the wholesale grocers are setting.

"I am not much of a believer in co-operative buying or in exchanges. Every man must run his own business. The business is too important to delegate to others. If I delegate to another man the buying, I will get careless. If one grocer buys for a number he will neglect his own business. If a manager, is employed, it may be found that he is making more money than if he were in business for himself.

"You can all adopt a platform that you will not sell anything at a loss and you will not do anything against the Sherman law in making that determination. Years ago we used to hear of one wholesale grocer buying below all the others, or so claiming. Now you can make no mistake in buying from any of the legitimate wholesale grocers. But why should any retail grocer add only 6 or 8 per cent. for the cost of distribution, when it costs him 16 or 18 per cent.?

"The principal troubles of the manufacturer who tries to distribute through the retailers direct is in credits and deliveries. It makes little difference to you what the price of an article is if you cannot get it when your customers want it. The wholesale grocer supplies you just when you desire the goods. We sometimes have to wait for weeks and months to have orders filled, and what would we do if we did not have stock in reserve? Imagine a retailer waiting for food that his customers wanted.

"In my opinion the business of the retail grocer is regularly one of buying and selling from day to day, with no gambling for rises in prices.

"Here is another difficulty in the retailer buying from manufacturers. Suppose that he has a large enough trade so that he can buy at wholesale. Will he keep the extra profit or use his advantage to cut below the prices at which his neighbors sell? Experience shows that he nearly always follows the latter course.

"No manufacturer sells more than 10 per cent. direct through retailers. We wholesale grocers sell the other 25 per cent. The wholesale grocer can distribute any manufacturer's products more economically than he himself can do. There is no way for the retailer to buy all his supplies from the manufacturers.

"A soap manufacturer sells his soap at $3.85 a box and so advertises it that we cannot sell it for more than $4. Why should we sell such soap when it means a loss to do so? But because the wholesalers refused to sell the soap it was said to be terrible.

"Not more than 1 per cent. of the retailers can afford to buy in wholesale quantities. This includes certain high-grade companies who get from 5 to 15 per cent. more for what they sell than do other grocers. The stores that make these higher profits do not hurt the ordinary retailer.

"If you can get a better price than your neighbors keep the additional profit thrown to you. The old idea of the wholesale grocer was to sell the staples at any old price hoping to make his profit by the sale of some proprietary articles. Now we believe in a profit on all articles. The grocery business is so large that we do not need large profits but we must make the cost of doing business and some profit.

"As long as a manufacturer can sell to both wholesaler and retailer he will do so, as that increases his output. When the retailer sees that it is his business to make a profit he will cease buying soap from a manufacturer who sells to you at $3.80 and makes you sell at $4. Some of you may be getting $5, and that is all right. But if he sells to your neighbor at $3.60, he is no friend of yours.

"It is ridiculous, the way some manufacturers try to pile up their goods on the retailers' shelves. They try coupons and other schemes. The man who shuts down on that sort of thing is your friend.

"If you buy from one, two or three wholesale houses and give all your attention to distribution, you will have no trouble. The wholesale and retail grocers are friends, no matter what is said. I know of a woman who had a store in a one-horse town in New Jersey for thirteen years and retired with a profit of $40,000. In all the years that she was in business she did not spend two hours in trying to beat down the prices of the wholesalers. She seldom asked about wholesale prices. But in her store the clerks, when an article was asked for, always showed first the most expensive. She had cheaper kinds, of course, but the highest-priced brand was always taken from the shelf first.

"If you can and must buy from a manufacturer, then, make a fair profit. Get the benefit of any low price that you may obtain.

"Such conferences as this should be a benefit to wholesaler and retailer, and I hope that others will follow. We are your friends and we should work together. We can do more for you than the manufacturer can. Remember that you are not making 10 per cent. if you figure it on the basis of the buying price, but you must figure on the basis of the selling price."

In his answer, Mr. Bishoff said that he intended to speak in defense of the buying exchanges, but the conciliatory tone of the remarks of the preceding speaker had taken the edge off much of what he had in mind to say. He continued in substance:—

"The formation of the buying exchanges is in accord with the tendency of the times. All sorts of associations and corporations have been formed and we have organized these exchanges to better our condition. All manufacturers and wholesalers offer inducements to buyers in large quantities. The small dealer loses these inducements if he buys alone, but obtains them by combining and buying with others. There are eight or ten staples on which a retailer saves several hundred dollars a year by buying through exchanges, so that his total saving each year runs into the thousands.

"Thrift is encouraged by the exchanges, as the members must settle at the regular meetings, instead of running easy accounts with the wholesaler. Long credits lead to careless habits.

"Good fellowship results from the association of the exchange. We never find price-cutting among the members. They do not sell below cost, and they do not give away the advantage of the lower wholesale prices.

"There is no question as to the right of the retailer to buy where he can get the best prices. If he can buy in wholesale quantities and finds that wholesalers will not sell to him, then he sees a conspiracy, an issue of might and not of right.

"The question is one of ethics, in a way. If the wholesaler is our friend, as he claims, are we not bound in honor to buy from him? But is he our friend? I say no. When the department stores began to sell groceries we asked the wholesalers not to supply them. The wholesalers were only too eager to sell to the department store, knowing that it would be our enemy. They stabbed us in the back. In their eagerness to get orders they forgot that it was the small grocers who had built up their business and had helped them to grow wealthy.

"The wholesale grocer supplied the nursing bottle for the department store, but when it grew strong it cast aside the wholesaler. The retailer has meanwhile learned what union can do.

"The department and chain stores almost took away our living. We were obliged to organize the exchanges to save ourselves. Why should a chain store buy from a manufacturer if we cannot? Is not our money just as good as that of the chain store? Why do not the wholesale grocers try to prevent the department and chain stores from buying from manufacturers?

"When you wholesalers can give us as low a price as the chain and department stores get and when they as well as retailers must buy from you, then the problem will be settled. Until then we must continue to buy through exchanges."

Mr. Hannahs spoke again briefly. He said that standard high-grade articles are often not to be had at chain stores, whose clerks must work off the store's cheaper brands or lose their jobs. The department stores, he said, commonly add more to the buying price than do the ordinary retailers. He said that he had been told that one department store in New York commonly makes a profit of 25 per cent. In his opinion such stores are not now very strongly in competition with ordinary retailers.

Mr. Bischoff said that the advertising of the department stores was a great injury, because the public gets the idea from such advertisements that prices in the big stores are low. He asked if the retail grocers ceased to buy through exchanges, would the wholesalers cease to sell the department and chain stores, also to hotels, restaurants and boarding houses? He said that some wholesalers even sell five-pounds cans of coffee to private consumers.

Charles Thorpe, the secretary of the New York State Association, Mr. Grey, former National secretary, and others spoke. Mr. Hannahs denied in answer to questions that the jobbers have written to manufacturers asking them not to sell to retailers or retailers' exchanges. He admitted that letters had been sent, asking the manufacturers what were their intentions as to selling to the exchanges. He said that the question as to selling to the hotel and restaurant trade had never been brought up at meetings of his association, and suggested that this was a subject that might be further discussed between the two associations.

A hearty vote of thanks was extended to Mr. Hannahs and to Mr. Bischoff. The debate was in the best of humor. Those who criticised the jobbers on certain points said that their remarks were aimed at other houses and did not apply to the association's guest of the evening.

[Owing to the large amount of space occupied by the above debate, it was found necessary to omit considerable other New York news.—ED.]

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market shows no change from last week. The consumptive demand is steady and fair for the season. Prices show no change for the week. There would doubtless be somewhat of a decline at this time, as is customary as the new season approaches, were it not that this year stocks are small. That is the only reason why values are as steady as they are. No radical change in any grade is looked for during the balance of the season.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has shown more firmness during the week, but without quotable change in actual coffees. Options have fluctuated considerably, closing the week netting a slight advance. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged. Javas and Mochas quiet at ruling prices. The general demand for coffee is fair.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose is unchanged for the week and is not moving very actively. Compound syrup is unchanged in price and dull. The warm weather has killed off the demand almost entirely. Sugar syrup is unchanged and still in good demand on account of comparative scarcity. Molasses shows no change for the week and only a very moderate demand.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market has been about unchanged for the week, but the general tone is still firm. Refined sugar has not yet shown the expected advance, but it is still considered inevitable that it will within a few weeks if not now. The heavy demand has not set in as yet, though a fair business is doing. Stocks of sugar in refiners' hands are fairly large, and there is no real reason for any further advance in refined at the present moment. Still, there is no forecasting the refiners' action. Some interest is manifested among the trade by the announcement that the new refinery of the Warner Sugar Refining Co., at Edgewater, N. J., would open within a few days with a capacity of 3,000 barrels a day and an immediate production of 1,000 barrels. If the fruit crop proves as large as is expected, the new refinery will probably be able to sell its output without difficulty.

Fish.

The fish market has been quiet during the week. Irish mackerel are so nearly exhausted that they are scarcely quotable. No interest is taken in spot shore fish, and the season for the new has not yet opened. Norways are moving to some extent, chiefly 3s and 4s, the former being in the better demand. The market is $1 to $2 weaker, owing to holders' desire to move the goods. Domestic sardines are unchanged and in better demand on spot than for future delivery. Foreign sardines are unchanged and dull. Certain of the French grades are somewhat weaker, but aside from that the market is steadily maintained. Cod, hake and haddock are very dull and unchanged in price. Salmon are in fair demand on spot at ruling prices. Future prices will be named in the not distant future.

Canned Goods.

There is no change in the tomato market since last week. Both spot and future tomatoes are dull, practically no interest being manifested in either. The market shows no further change in price during the week, but it is by no means strong. Corn is dull, both spot and future, without change in price. Peas are in the same condition exactly. Peaches are very scarce and show no change in any way. Apples are in light demand at ruling prices. The small line of Baltimore canned goods is dull and rule at unchanged prices. California canned goods are quiet in first hands at steady prices. In second hands the market is easy and stocks in most cases inconveniently large. Advices came from New York State during the week that the acreage for canned goods would be much reduced this year, with an almost certain reduction in the pack. Dairying is more profitable to the farmers than raising vegetables.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes are much firmer on the coast, owing to reports of crop damage. Some holders are asking a 3¼-cent basis, which means 1¼ cents more than sales have been made for in the East. The market in the East is no firmer as yet, but surely will be if the situation in California continues. The demand at this writing is good. Peaches are dull and unchanged. Apricots are dull on spot, at prices which while they show heavy reductions from former prices, are still much above the new prices made during the week for future delivery. Sales of future apricots at the prices reported elsewhere have been fair. Currants are in fair request, all conditions being unchanged. Raisins are very dull and easy, demand being light. Citron, dates and figs are dull at ruling prices.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans, both foreign and domestic, rule unchanged and in fair demand. Marrows are higher and are moving well. California limas are unchanged in price and in fair demand. Split and dried peas are in fair demand at stiff and unchanged prices.

Butter.

Since a week ago the butter market has declined 2 cents per pound on all grades, owing to the increased supply of fresh made butter. The market at this writing is steady at the decline price. There will be, however, still more increase in the production, and it is likely that still lower prices will develop later in the season. The quality of the butter arriving now is as good as could be expected for the season, but will show improvement within a week or two. The stock of storage butter is about exhausted, and the trade are being mostly supplied with fresh made stock.

Eggs.

The egg market is unchanged. The receipts are still liberal, but there is a good consumptive as well as speculative demand which absorbs all grades as they arrive. Present conditions will continue until warmer weather and a falling off in receipts. The quality of eggs now arriving is the best of the year.

Cheese.

The cheese market is about unchanged. There are very few old cheese left, and they are likely to go out unchanged. Some new cheese have come in, but, as usual, they are not up to the market and are selling at 2 cents below the price of the old. The market is in a very satisfactory condition, but lower prices can be looked for as the season advances and the make increases.

Produce.

Pennsylvania potatoes, 75 to 80 cents per bushel; York State, 70 to 75 cents per bushel, demand fair; Ohio globe onions, $1 to $1.20 per bushel; York State, $1 to $1.10 per bushel; Bermudas, $1.75 per crate; Spanish, small crates, $1 to $1.25; large crates, $3 to $3.50, demand fair; yellow turnips, 60 to 65 cents per bushel, demand fair; beets, $3.50 to $4 per 100 bunches, demand good; carrots, $2 to $2.25 per barrel, demand fair; Danish cabbage, $7 to $8 per ton, $2 to $3 per 100, de-

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

mand fair; watercress, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches, demand fair; scullions, $1 to $1.25 per 100 bunches, demand good; spinach, $1 to $1.50 per barrel, demand fair; salad, 3 to 5 cents per head, demand good; radishes, $1.50 to $2.50 per 100 bunches, demand fair; horseradish, $3 to $3.50 per barrel, demand fair to good.

Provisions.

The provision market is steady and unchanged. All cuts of smoked meats are selling moderately on the same basis as a week ago and both the supply and the consumptive demand are about normal. Both pure and compound lard are steady and unchanged, with a brisk trade reported. There is only a fair demand for dried beef, canned meats and barrel pork, all of which rule steady and unchanged. No change is looked for during the next few days.

Green Fruit.

Apples, Baldwins, $2 to $3 per barrel; Hulbersons, $2.50 to $3 per barrel; Spy, $2 to $3 per barrel; Spitz, $2 to $2.50 per barrel; Russets, $2 to $2.50 per barrel, demand fair; pineapples, $2.75 to $3.50 per box, demand fair to good; grapefruit, $2 to $5.50 per box, demand fair to good; lemons, $2.25 to $2.75 per box, demand fair; Florida oranges, $2 to $3.25 per box, demand poor; California oranges, $2.65 to $3.25 per box, demand fair to good; bananas, jumbo, $1.75 to $2; firsts, $1.50 to $1.75; 8-hands, $1.10 to $1.20; 7-hands, 75 to 90 cents; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents, demand poor.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Spices.

The market is fairly active, especially for spot goods. There is a great scarcity of many grades and this is becoming more noticeable. Prices are practically unchanged, but the market has a firm tone.

Pepper.—Spot stocks are nearly cleaned up and the trade is compelled to await on near-by arrivals. The market is firm and with a slight upward tendency for far-off futures.

Cayennes are scarce. There is an active market at present, which will continue over the summer months.

Cloves.—We note a better market for this spice. Buying has been in fair lots at practically unchanged values.

Pimento (Allspice).—Market unchanged and present values are safe.

Mace.—There is a great scarcity at present and prime quality goods are hard to obtain.

Nutmegs.—Demand very fair at the lowest prices ever known, especially for large size nuts.

Cassias.—Saigon as well as Batavia bark very scarce and China grades are also active. We will see higher prices for China case Cassia during the summer.

Gingers.—There is a scarcity in all grades. Cochin is much firmer. No changes of any importance during the week.

Seeds.—Celery, Coriander, as well as Caraway, are all firm and we hardly look for any declines at this time.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

Underlying conditions favor an improvement in the merchandise markets. Monetary matters are without doubt in a much healthier condition, as is evidenced by the recent successful sales of very large issues of railroad, State and city bonds at prices satisfactory to the vendors. Manufacturing establishments in nearly all lines of business are resuming work, some on full time and some on part time, which is a distinct gain in that direction. It is again possible for mercantile houses to borrow money on single name paper at a fair rate without having to put up the family jewels, etc., and the outlook for the crops all over the country is very encouraging, with the single exception, we believe, of the California prune crop. The large amount of idle money now accumulated at the principal banking centres is seeking borrowers, thereby exactly reversing the conditions prevailing a month or six weeks ago, and the country banks will soon doff their cap to the interior jobbers who don't come around as often as they used to. The canned goods market has been going all one way since last November and should therefore be among the first lines of merchandise to show improvement. If indications may be depended upon, tomatoes will be the first article in the line to show increased activity and probably some improvement in value. No one expects, or wants, to see any boom in them, nothing more than the average demand for this time in the season. A decided increase in the demand for both spot and future tomatoes commenced ten days ago, and the buying orders came from nearly all markets except the West. At this writing it looks like the activity will continue, especially because of the fact that the month of May is one of the largest of the year for the distribution of tomatoes. The growers and the canners are a little closer together than they were last week regarding making contracts for the coming crop, and the canners are gradually yielding to the growers' views as to price. Spot and future tomatoes are worth attention.

Besides tomatoes, there was improvement in the number, if not the quantity, of the orders for carload lots or less of assorted goods, and the character of the buying indicates that the jobbers are going into the new canning season with floors as nearly bare of goods as possible. Nearly every assorted carload shipment recently has embraced as many as five or six different articles, and the combined shipments covered perhaps every article in the list. The general market continues in buyers' favor this week, and some lines can be bought under the asking prices.

MARKET NOTES.

The market for old white potatoes has gone to pieces during the week. From a price of 95 cents to $1 per bushel, the price declined to 65 cents. The cause is accumulation of stock and lack of demand. The supply of potatoes is greatly in excess of the demand.

New potatoes are coming along from Florida and average $4 per barrel for the best stock. The season is about two-thirds over and the demand is fair.

The past week witnessed the heaviest receipts of asparagus from New Jersey in the history of the business. The price ranges from 10 to 20 cents and the demand is good.

Florida eggplants range from $2 to $2.50 per crate and are in good demand.

Strawberries are abundant, though they closed the week a little higher. The bulk of the receipts are from North Carolina and range from 16 to 18 cents per quart. The quality is good and the demand excellent.

String beans show a demand in excess of the supply and a consequent decline in price to $1 to $2. Besides being too many, there are lots of poor beans coming. The demand is light.

Florida tomatoes range from $1.75 to $2 per crate. Owing to bad weather the quality is only fair. Hothouse tomatoes average 20 cents per pound. The demand is fair.

Holders of apples have made heavy losses this year. The market ranges from $3 to $3.50, which to some holders shows a loss of 50 cents to $1 per barrel. The demand is very poor.

North Carolina peas are showing very good quality, but the supply is small and the demand excellent. The price averages $2 for one-third barrel baskets and $3 for half barrel.

There are a few lima beans on the market from Florida, but the quality is poor. Good beans would bring $5 per basket, but these command only $1.50.

Most of the salad on the market is from North Carolina, but some is coming from near-by points. The price ranges from nothing up to $1.25 and the demand is good.

Cucumbers have declined. Florida stock ranges from $1 to $1.50 per crate. Hothouse cues average $1.25 per dozen.

Radishes are glutted and very cheap. Good stock can be bought at this writing at $1 per barrel of 150 to 200 bunches.

Editor Science of Advertising.

Dear Sir:—Inclosed find circular. This is the first day of sale and orders nearly swamped us this morning. Mailed them out yesterday to all on our mailing list of about six hundred. Had a good man to distribute in the poorer districts. It was meant for a price-list, but put in some description and cuts so that it would not be so dry.

Know that it could be improved on. Let us know how.

Yours truly,
WOOLFORD & Co.

P. S.—We have a sale every Spring to get off slow sellers. Have signs 3x4 on all the wagons, "Special Sale This Week."

The circular inclosed herewith was a large affair, measuring 11 x 17 inches. The printing was good and the paper was rather unusually so. Here is the thing in photographic miniature:—

This is as good as any price-list circular can be. Woolford & Co. have done what I have been trying hard to get all readers of this department to do when they advertise cut prices—give the regular price as well as the cut price. It seems so obvious that that should be done that it ought not to need much argument, and yet circulars keep coming into this department with this most important means of comparison omitted. Woolford & Co. say they know their circular could be improved, but from what they say about results, it is beyond question that it was a pretty good circular. It might have been improved by saying a little bit more about some of the goods. Take soups, for instance. The Richelieu brand may be known in the South, but it is not at all known in the North. Unless it is quite familiar to the people of Woolford & Co's territory, and so able to stand on its reputation, something should be said about its quality. Just a line is enough—something like—"These soups are closer to rich, tasty home-made soups than any other brand made." On general principles it is always better to follow this plan. Of course it is more important to do it where the sale is being made on quality than where, as in this case, it is being made on price, but in all cases it is extremely important and ought never to be lost sight of.

Other than in the above respect, I consider this circular good. I particularly commend the fact that it looks good. The paper is high grade and so is the printing. A fine appearance wins the same favorable introduction for a piece of printed matter that it does for a human being.

"Six Weeks."

Here's something that caught my eye and riled me all up as I was reading the Sunday paper last week:—

IN SIX WEEKS BECOME A SUCcessful traveling salesman; positions secured graduates with responsible firms; tuition payable from your earnings. Bradstreet Instruction Company, Buffalo, N. Y.

Think of it! Silk purses made out of sow's ears in only six weeks! Leopards' spots changed in only six weeks! The Ethiopian's skin made white in only six weeks!

It's foolish to say it can't be done—here's people who agree to do it!

Such rot as this has a perfectly maddening effect on an old road man like me. Here I am thirty years on the road! Do I know it all? I don't know one-tenth of the science of meeting men and selling goods! Not a tenth! Nobody ever knows it all.

Yet here's a concern that will teach you the whole business in forty-two days! Lord, what a lot of time I've wasted!

By gad, the more I think of it the hotter I get!

Why, only the other day I fell down on a matter that I thought I ought to have been able to take care of all right. I don't know yet where the trouble was.

This is just to show that after thirty years' experience a fellow can make breaks.

I went in to see if I could sell some goods to a dealer that I'd never sold before. My house had done a little business with him some years ago, but he'd drifted away and mine was the job to get him back if I could.

I had a line of stuff that I thought he ought to have, so I went in to see him. Now, after a man's been rubbing up against people for thirty years and selling goods every day, it's natural for him to think he knows something about approaching a probable customer, ain't it?

Well, I thought I knew how to approach this man, but I found in two minutes I had guessed wrong. Something I said, or the expression on my old mug, or something, rubbed him the wrong way, and I didn't get even a look-in.

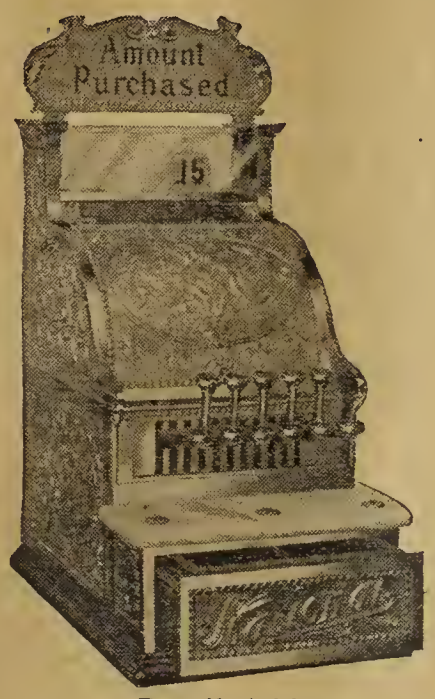
With thirty years' experience I don't know what it was, and after a power of thinking I've had to give it up.

The trouble with me is I've had too much experience. I'd a done better if I'd studied six weeks with a correspondence school!

You know three-fourths of selling goods is knowledge of human nature. If you know how to size your customer up you can usually sell him goods. If you don't know how to size him up, you may still sell him goods, but you'll work four times as hard to do it as the salesman who can size him up.

I know a salesman—he'd make $10,000 a year if he wasn't so blamed lazy—who can look at a man he's never seen or heard of and tell exactly what tone to take with him. I've seen him do it fifty times and he never went wrong once. How does he do it? Instinct, I think. I can't do it, neither can ninety-nine salesmen out of a hundred.

What a lovely advantage that instinct gives a salesman in his work! Why, it's like knowing what a man's hobby is before you start in to talk with him. You can guarantee in advance to get him going.



I know another salesman who's really a better salesman than the other fellow, but he ain't one, two, three with him when it comes to sizing a buyer up in advance. I say he's a better salesman because when he once gets inside the customer's shell he can put up a line of talk that knocks the other fellow silly.

But while the second salesman is working to get inside the shell, the first man's apt to be inside and have him sold.

You know it's all rot about it being enough to go up to a dealer with a "Good morning, Mr. Smith, anything in my line to-day?"

That's all right with old customers whose orders you're sure to get anyway, but it ain't worth two cranberries in getting new trade or big trade.

You've got to know how to get at the man.

Can you learn that in a six weeks' correspondence course?

You can, the same way the fellow learned the mail-order business. Remember that? He answered an advertisement that offered to show anybody how to make a steady income without working. The price of the great secret was a quarter.

The poor fool sent in his quarter and got back a card that said "Fish for suckers like we do."

I suppose I'm really working myself all up over nothing. Because in selling goods on the road it's a case of survival of the fittest more than in any other line I know. If a fellow can't make good he's fired, that's all. But it's a shame that anybody should give up any money to a scheme like this. Still, they will, I'm mighty sure about that.

I've had many a laugh about a barber school that was started in Philadelphia four or five years ago. You could learn to be a beautiful barber in three weeks. I offered to send my wife there so she could shave me and cut my back hair, but she didn't seem to take to it. They got quite a lot of victims, but it didn't last a year. As soon as the graduates got jobs and had a chance to get their work in, the whole scheme collapsed. They couldn't make good and nobody would keep 'em. There were some fearful hair cuts on the street while the barber university was open. A friend of mine got up against one of the graduates one day and before he knew it got him to cut his hair. When he went home that night his wife shed tears.

That'll be the way with the six weeks' salesman school. If any of you fellows get up against a young fellow who comes into your store and recites the following: "I trust I am right in believing this to be Mr. Smith. If so, good morning Mr. Smith. If not, you will confer a favor upon me by directing me to Mr. Smith. It is Mr. Smith? Thank you, Mr. Smith. I ask but a moment of your valuable time, sir, while I introduce to your notice the most wonderful product of its kind in the world! A product, Mr. Smith, unmatched and unrivalled, a product that is to competitive products, sir, what the mighty sun, shedding its glorious beneficence upon rich and poor alike, is to the useful but humble tallow candle."

When that hits you you'll know it's a graduate of the six weeks' course.

Live Topics at National Retailers' Convention.

Boston Convention of National Retail Grocers' Association Will Discuss Direct Selling to Retailers, Prescribing a Minimum Retail Selling Price and Several Other Burning Trade Questions.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Cleveland, Ohio,
April 30, 1908.

The topics presented for discussion at the convention of the National Retail Grocers' Convention, to be held in Boston, Mass., May 11 to 14th, are of vital interest to the retailers of the United States. The men chosen to present these topics to the convention are men well able to do so in a most intelligent manner.

The duty of the National Association to impress legislation, the manufacturer making the minimum retail selling price. shall quantity make the price, and parcels post, are all live questions, but the greatest of these is the question as to the position in the commercial world of the retail merchant.

There will be no adjournment for recreation or entertainment during the three days' session of the convention, although the officers have been approached in regard to adjournment over Wednesday.

There is so much to do, and so little time to do it in, that it will require the entire three days after the opening of the convention to discuss thoroughly these all-important topics.

Every Eastern State has affiliated with the National Association. The Western States are organized as never before. The central States are in the very best possible condition. The States of North Carolina, Virginia, Arkansas and some others are at the present time in excellent shape.

Everything points to an enthusiastic convention, which is full of promise of good things for all those who attend.

Fifteen months have rolled around since the convention of the National Association of Retail Grocers at Dallas.

During this period the officers have been untiring in their efforts on behalf of the membership and the success of the organization.

We have at all times received a splendid support from the trade press of the entire country. We wish at this time to acknowledge your assistance and to extend to you our heartfelt gratitude for the support you have given us.

The influence of our organization has increased tenfold. The members have the utmost confidence in the officers of the association. We realize that this condition, to a very large extent, has been brought about by the assistance of the trade press.

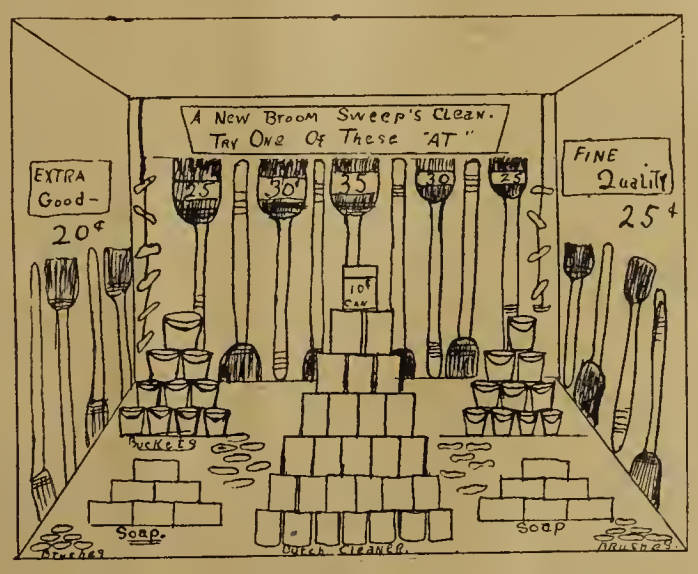
Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

Another House Cleaning Display.



The sign in the window reads, a "New Broom Sweeps Clean." This is the best time of the year to have house-cleaning articles in the window, especially these nice days when there are ever so many people on the street.

It is well to have good brooms to form the background and brooms on the sides, also in the back two strings of scrub brushes. It is a good idea to have prices on articles.

Then on each side (back) a group of buckets and in the centre a large pyramid of Dutch Cleanser; also scrub brushes can be laid around here and there on the floor of the window. On each side of Dutch Cleanser can be placed good scrubbing soap, say Oleine or Fels Naptha. Ammonia and Bon Ami may also be added. Trusting some grocer will make use of display.

J. F. Geary.

A Shoe Polish Window.

A seasonable window at present is one of shoe polishes.

Cover the floor and back with crepe paper. Cover an ordinary soap box with crepe paper and lay in the back of the window at the centre.

Lean a board covered with crepe paper against this box; on this box put two shoes, one dusty and dirty and the other polished.

Draw a couple of hands and print "before" on one and "after" on the other. Tack these on the front of the box.

Run a number of streamers from the box to the top of the window.

Stand several boxes of blacking and a blacking brush on top.

Pile several kinds of blacking, whitening and tan polish around the floor of the window with the prices on.

Hang this sign above the shoes:—

New California Asparagus Prices Much Below Last Year.

Packers Reduce Prices From Fifty Cents to One Dollar and Fifteen Cents Per Dozen. Prospects Much Better Than Last Year. Jobbers Left With Unsold Stock, Which They Cannot Move Even at Cost or Below.

Some of the packers of California asparagus are out with future prices for 1908, which show a marked decline from the opening prices of 1907. The largest packer of asparagus, the California Fruit Canners' Association, has not yet named prices, and probably will be in no hurry to do so. The only concern of any importance which has named them is the Central California Canneries. Hickmott & Co. will be back in the field this year, to a limited extent, but have not named prices as yet.

The figures named by the Central Canneries Co. are as follows, together with the association's prices for last year. The reduction ranges from 50 cents to $1.15 per dozen:—

	1908.	1907.
No. 2½ square Mammoth white peeled...	$4.85	$6.00
No. 2½ square Mammoth white.....	4.15	4.75
No. 2½ square Mammoth green peeled...	4.00	4.50
No. 2½ square Mammoth green.....	3.25	4.25
No. 2½ square large white peeled.....	4.25	5.25
No. 2½ square large white	3.50	4.00
No. 2½ square large green peeled.....	3.75	4.75
No. 2½ square green.....	2.85	3.75
No. 2½ square medium white.....	3.25	3.75
No. 2½ square medium green	2.65	3.50
No. 2½ square small white.....	3.00	3.50
No. 2½ square small green.....	2.50	3.50
No. 1 square white tips	3.25	3 60
No. 1 square green.....	2.50	3.40

The prospects for this year's asparagus pack are good. Last year, it will be remembered, flooding by the Sacramento River at a critical point destroyed a good part of the crop and the pack was exceedingly small and prices high. They were so high, in fact, that the sales of California asparagus during the past season have been lighter probably than ever before in the recent history of the business. Almost all jobbers have unsold stock on hand from their future purchases of 1907, although they have reduced prices to cost or below.

Business-Like Future Buying

More packers than ever are this year offering to give 100 per cent. delivery contracts to their customers on future canned goods. It was an inevitable reform; there never was any valid reason why they should not have been given.

We were almost the pioneers in this full delivery business on Blue Bell and Clover Farm canned goods, as fancy lines as are packed in all Maryland. If you will place your future orders for these, your jobber will sell them to you and guarantee to deliver 100 per cent.

Why not place your canned goods buying on a strict business basis?

The Best Slicing Machines.

Little Falls, N. J.,
April 24, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—Can you tell me which you think is the most economical in the end to buy, the American Slicing Machine, or the Eversharp Slicing Machine? And is there any other machine which will give as good satisfaction, but not as high in price as these machines?

Yours truly,
CHAS. J. WACK.

These machines are the best on the market. Both are extremely good and the "Grocery World" would not like to discriminate between them. Why not get samples of the work of each and get some specifications as to how rapidly and economically each works?

As to Co-operative Buying.

Artz, Pa., April 28, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I read so much about the Retail Grocers' Association and co-operative buying in your paper.

Would you please give me some explanation of the said association, its advantages, the fee for membership, etc. Also let me know if we, retail grocers, can buy cheaper through this association than we can otherwise.

Thanking you in advance for any light you may give me on this subject, I beg to remain,

Yours truly,
J. IRWIN MILLER.

There is no general co-operative buying organization, as this correspondent seems to think. Various retail grocers' associations simply do co-operative buying among themselves.

In a nutshell, the plan is this: Take a retail grocers' association with a hundred members. Each member buys his own goods, mostly from a jobber. Under co-operative buying the association would do the buying, giving one order for the hundred men. There are several advantages. The large order brings larger purchasing power and a lower price, because it is no longer necessary to buy of the jobber and to pay his profit—all manufacturers but a very few will fill orders that large direct. The association then turns over to the various members the share of each in the common purchase, charging only enough over cost to pay running expenses. This means that a retail grocer buying one case can buy actually cheaper than many jobbers.

The Twelve Cent Cereal Price Again.

Chicago, April 29, 1908.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—We again take the liberty of referring to what we consider one of the most important propositions before the retail grocer to-day, namely, the adoption, through the co-operation of the manufacturer, of a minimum price for standard size packages of rolled oats under advertised brands that will show the grocer a fair profit, not only on the present cost to him of these goods, but also with regard to the ensuing year.

Grocers of the country during the past season, to say nothing of previous years, have suffered through the sacrifice of their profits in the policy pursued by some manufacturers of advertising through general publicity and printing on the packages of a fixed and unprofitable price to the consumer. The recent effective opposition to this policy has been so general on the part of the grocers that we are satisfied that this fixing of an unprofitable price by the manufacturer is not approved of by the trade in any quarter.

We raise this point as having a direct bearing upon a move recently made by one of the leading cereal companies, which has been, we feel, hastily referred to by some of the trade papers as solving what is referred to as the "cereal situation," in which, through a reduction of 25 cents per case to the jobber and putting the price of thirty-six packages of this brand to the grocer at $3, the concern in question has issued a card to the grocers of the country, from which we quote as follows:—

"You can sell (their brand) at 10 cents if you take advantage of this offer and order at once."

In this connection it should be observed that the same manufacturer, as well as others, has just finished a campaign to the retailer, offering him certain inducements at a higher price; hence, these grocers, and these are in the majority, unable to take advantage of this special temporary offer, but compelled to meet the 10-cent price of those who do, must sustain a loss on stock which they have been urged to lay in in the best of faith.

It is assured that there will be no lower prices in the present crop to justify any such reduction; even the circular referred to shares this view, as per the following advice quoted to the trade, jobbing and retail, announcing this temporary cut:—

"The prices of oats does not justify this reduction, and we may not be able to continue this price. There is nothing in the grain situation or cost of material to warrant this reduction. It is made solely to increase the consumption."

We do not approve of the policy of producing volume at the expense of the grocer, and from advices which have come to hand, we are satisfied that the grocers share the same view.

With regard to the future, the new crop is not yet fully planted. For the past three years exports of oats (grain) by the United States have steadily increased; this is also true of the consumption in domestic markets. Sowing advices indicate that there is no increase in this year's acreage to provide for this increased demand. Hence, when the poor quality of the seed oats that are now being sown and its possible effect on the yield is considered, we feel that it has been logically shown that it is unsafe and unfair to the retail grocers of the country for the manufacturer to speculate in his brands for the present and for the future by this direct attempt to force the price of standard size advertised packages into the 10-cent basis.

Every grocer of the United States can take this matter to heart and decide for himself whether or not we have summed the situation up correctly and make his protest against this policy, according to his own convictions, based on his unprofitable experience in the past.

We take this occasion for going on record in stating that we shall not meet this move of our competitor; on the other hand, we shall not only continue our policy of encouraging and assisting the grocers of the country to obtain a profitable minimum on "Mothers' Oats," but take this occasion for announcing that our policy in the future shall be the same, even though the new crop moves at a lower price than the present cost of grain, and as a result we are in a position to name the retail grocer a lower price on "Mothers' Oats" than now in effect, we shall, having established the 12-cent minimum generally, permit him to take the additional profits on our brand for himself, in a measure offsetting the increased cost of doing business with which every thinking grocer is familiar, and in this manner without any desire to pose as philanthropists, secure the willing support of the grocers in pushing "Mothers' Oats."

We have endeavored to cover the situation fully, feeling that probably you would consider our presentation of this case of sufficient interest to your readers to justify its publication, and any editorial which you might see fit to offer on the subject.

Yours truly,

More Lease of Life for Colored Canned Goods.

Importers of French peas may rest easy as to the question of sulphate of copper for the balance of this year at least. A message from Secretary Wilson to Frank La Manna, chairman of the Importers' Committee, which has been petitioning for the reference of the sulphate of copper question to the Board of Scientists, stated that the department would permit the sale of any goods prepared with sulphate of copper imported before January 1, 1909. Nothing was said, however, regarding reference of the final question to the Board or its determination by any other means, and the decision evidently concerns only the 1908 pack.

We are probably doing the largest wholesale butter business on carton brand in the entire East. Our Gurnse Butter, a fancy dairy butter wrapped in brine-dipped paper and packed in one-pound cartons, is being regularly sold in constantly increasing quantities by a very large proportion of Philadelphia stores. The trade is now well-established outside of Philadelphia, and the general results surprise even us.

They are no better, however, than Gurnse Butter deserves. It is a fancy dairy butter, made from the very milking in our own dairies and under our own eye. We are so proud of this brand, so determined that it shall do us credit and serve the retailer well, that not one pound is allowed to go out if it even grades a shade below our standard of perfection.

There are hundreds of other silver polishes, there are dozens of simple things any housewife can use for cleaning her silver, yet in the face of this Electro-Silicon is a household word in hundreds of thousands of American and foreign homes.

Why? Simply because it gives better results than other polishes. Be very sure, if it didn't do that that it would never be where it is to-day.

of it comes to Philadelphia, "collect"—the companies, it is said, have been placing the condemned fruit into the hands of an agent, who sells it to hucksters, venders and others looking for bargains.

During every fruit and vegetable season the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and the Adams Express Co., through their agents, sell thousands of barrels and crates of decayed fruits in Philadelphia. The Southern growers ship their crops to regular dealers here for sale and when, through delay in delivery by the transportation company, their fruit and vegetables reach the market in a decayed and rotten condition, the dealers refuse to accept them.

The transportation company immediately places such decayed stock in the hands of their agents for sale at whatever price can be obtained. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. last week has sold more than 1,000 barrels of half-rotten cabbages, besides many other kinds of vegetables.

In New York and Baltimore the Board of Health takes full charge of all this decayed stock and does not allow it to be sold. The Board of Health and the Dairy and Food Department will both be complained to within the next few days.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

STRAWBERRIES.

We want you to work on the "standing order" idea in selling berries. Commence Monday morning and make a list of people that want one, two or three baskets a day. Your arguments in favor of this arrangement are all sound. It does away with the daily bother of ordering. It insures fruit at every meal, and above all your standing order customer gets the early arrival delivered in the cool of the morning. We want to get one hundred names. It can be done and it will be before closing time Saturday.

MAKING NEW CUSTOMERS

consists in treating old ones well. The store and its methods are oftener the subject of social conversation than you may fancy. This is where the good or the bad advertising comes in. Your end in this advertising scheme is polite attention. Our end is system and quality goods, along with invariable clean-cut dealing. Nothing can hinder the success of any business that keeps up these standards.

If you fail in your part you are an expensive employee. Should we seemingly fail in ours, enter a complaint.

THE ENCLOSED BLANKS

read "What have I done to-day to increase this business." You will each find six blanks, space for remarks and space for your name. You will hand one into the office every evening next week. The clerk that does—really does—the best thing to increase the business will get two weeks' extra vacation during the summer with pay. The one that does the second best thing will get one week's extra vacation with pay.

SCRUB BRUSHES.

We have fifty dozen too many scrub brushes. Cleaning time is here. They're all the cow-mouth scrubs made of cocoa fibre. They get in the corners. The fibre doesn't bend, it remains stiff 'till the end. They're the best 10-cent scrub made. Let's see how many you can work off.

PRINTED SIGNS

must be on everything. No matter where goods are displayed or how many or few are displayed, nothing must remain without a sign. Hand your copy to the floorwalker to be O. K'd., and the sign writer will very soon hand you the card. The reading matter will very likely be corrected from time to time. Take notice of the corrections and study brevity from them. It's more difficult to put three right words on a card than six with a superfluous three.

KEEP FORCE IN FRONT.

The Force people are sampling the town. It is a big generous sample and is going to make an unusual demand. Keep it in front. Keep it well in sight. It's up to us to take advantage of this, or any similar scheme of practical advertising. There must be no likes or dislikes of any article that the manufacturer booms at large expense. It's up to us to get part of the money he is spending.

AMONG THE TRADE.

Creditors have filed a petition in the United States District Court to have the Success Grocery Co., of this city, adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. The petitioners are: American Preserve Co., $10; Henry L. Wilson's Sons Co., $39.61; N. R. Schaffer, $221.32; The Murgatroyd Grocery Co., $148.37; John A. Baysen, $71.93; Northwestern Provision Co., $41.

New Jersey Meat Packers Under the Ban.

The United States Department of Agriculture has withdrawn inspection from one of the largest meat packing establishments in Paterson, N. J., because of violation of the meat inspection regulations. Samples of lard prepared by this concern were found on chemical examination to be adulterated with beef tallow and the Federal inspector detected employees of the establishment in the act of dumping several barrels of low-grade inedible fat and scraps into the lard tank. Without Federal inspection the products of this company may not be shipped in interstate or foreign commerce.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

St. Louis, Mo.

The St. Louis (Mo.) Retail Grocers' Association has adopted a plan by which any member with an overstock of any goods will report them to the secretary. The secretary will then post the item on the association blackboard so that any grocer in need of such goods can inquire about them.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES.

DO YOU WANT TO SELL YOUR BUSINESS?

We find buyers for grocery and general store businesses—nothing else. We are specialists in that and we know what we are about.

In the term "grocery stores" we include butter and egg stores, tea and coffee stores, green groceries and anything else in the same line.

If you want to sell your business, we have a customer. If you want to buy one, we know where something is that we're sure will suit you.

EVERY ONE A GOOD CHANCE.

No. 313.—In heart of Philadelphia's most aristocratic residential district. Store 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, half cash, balance monthly. The people who buy at this store are the promptest payers in the city. Stock $2,000-$3,000, net profits 20 per cent., owing to the fact that customers are mostly wealthy. Owner going to the country and will sell at inventory. This store is a little old-fashioned in some respects, but is thoroughly prosperous and can be very greatly increased.

No. 314.—In Ocean County, N. J. Summer resort, but good winter population also. General store, 40 x 75 feet. Doing $30,000 yearly, half cash, balance strict 30 days. Present stock $5,000, but can be reduced to $2,500 without impairing business. Uses two teams. Net clear 10 per cent. Balance of building divided into flat and offices, profitably rented. Owner retiring from business and will sell at inventory.

No. 324.—In North Philadelphia, store 16x42 feet. Does $300 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock $750. Uses one team. Clear net profits 12 per cent. Good house connected, for sale or rent. Owner retiring from business. Price inventory.

No. 326.—In West Philadelphia, store 17x32 feet. Does $350 to $450 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Stock $400 to $500. One team. Good house connected. Net profits 15 per cent. Owner retiring from grocery business, and will sell at inventory. This store has been established 20 years, and is solidly prosperous.

No. 329.—In Germantown, Philadelphia. Does $300 weekly, all cash. Stock about $1,000. No team. Nets clear 10 per cent. This business sells only groceries. The meat department is rented to another dealer on profitable terms, which make advertiser's rent very low. Owner has other business which takes his time. Price inventory.

No. 333.—General store in Mifflin County, Pa. An extremely strong proposition. Size 30x100 feet. Business about $4,000 per month, 40 per cent. cash. Stock $6,000, which can be reduced considerably. Uses two teams. Business thoroughly profitable, netting about $5,000 per year. Owner in poor health and wants to retire to country place. Will make very favorable terms. Low price for fixtures. Stock at inventory, with proper allowance for everything not strictly up to the mark. The business can be very decidedly increased.

No. 336.—On best business street of West Philadelphia. Store 16x27 feet. Does $150 to $200 weekly, all cash. Stock about $700. No team delivery. Clears 20 per cent. as expenses are low. Good dwelling connected for sale or rent. Good reasons which will be fully explained. Price inventory.

No. 341.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and delicatessen. Size 20x30 feet. Does $300 weekly. All cash. Stock $2,000, but can be reduced to $1,300. Push cart delivery. Net profits, 15 per cent., as family run store. Established 12 years. Owner must sell as death compels him to assume another business. Price inventory. Fixtures will run about $1,500, but can be reduced to $1,100. Amount required, around $3,000. Cash or good security. Dwelling.

No. 345.—In West Philadelphia. Meats and provisions. Size 15x28 feet. Does about $11,000, three-fourths cash. Mostly sells meats, so stock only averages $250 No team. Actual net profits, 20 per cent. Owner wishes to change business, for reasons which will be explained. Price inventory. Take around $800. Dwelling.

No. 346.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats, provisions. Size, 16 x 30. Does $200 to $250 weekly, three-quarters cash, balance weekly. Stock about $500. Push cart delivery. Net profits 12 per cent. Low rent and expenses. Satisfactory reasons for selling. Price inventory. For stock and fixtures about $1,200 required. This is an extremely strong small proposition.

No. 347.—In high class part of West Philadelphia. Meats, provisions, canned goods, etc. Size, 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, all cash. Stock $300 to $350. One team. Clear net profits 15 per cent. Rent, $30 monthly. Pay roll, $21 weekly. No real estate. Owner wants to get in other business and will sell at inventory. Cost about about $1,000, without team.

No. 353.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and provisions. Size, 16 x 30 feet. Does $14,000 yearly, two-thirds cash. Dwelling connected. Stock, $1,000 to $1,500. No team. Net profits, 10 per cent. Owner wants to go further into suburbs and will sell at inventory or lump sum of $1,500. Splendid chance for adding meats.

No. 356.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 36 feet. Does $400 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Dwelling connected, if wanted. Stock about $800. Uses one team. Nets clear 10 per cent. Owner needs a rest and his eyesight is failing. Will sell at inventory. Will take about $1,000.

No. 360.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 17 x 30 feet. Does $400 to $500 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock, $6co. Owner takes out $40 weekly, beside living expenses. Uses one team. Good dwelling attached. Owner is going into the saloon business and will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,000. This is a splendid money-making proposition.

No. 362.—Near Tioga, Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 20 x 30 feet. Does $125 weekly, half cash. Stock, $1,000. Clean net profits, 15 per cent. Dwelling connected for sale. Owner has Government position and cannot give attention. Will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,500 for stock and fixtures and around $2,500 for the property. Full investigation.

No. 363—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Store 17 x 38 feet. Does $17,000 to $18,000, two-thirds cash. Stock $500. Net profits 10 per cent. Good 10-room dwelling connected for sale. Uses one team. Owner has seashore hotel and wants to give it his whole time. Take $2,500 on the property and inventory for stock and fixtures. Established 10 years ago and a very successful business.

No. 365—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 30 feet. Does $350 to $400 weekly, three-quarter cash, balance weekly. Nets clean 10 per cent. above everything. Stock about $900. This store was established seven years ago and is thoroughly prosperous and profitable. The present owner bought it our months ago. He wanted a certain ice cream store which the owner refused to sell and he then bought this store. The ice cream store is now for sale, and as the owner of the grocery prefers that business he wants it if he can get it. Will sell at inventory. Will take all told about $1,600. Fullest investigation.

In all of these the cause of selling is good, and the fullest investigation courted. Every one paying.

We Are Advertising This Trade-Mark

This trade-mark means to Jams and Marmalades what "Sterling" means to silver; the best that can be made; sound fruit and sugar; absolutely pure. Better get acquainted with it.

Assorted case, 2 doz. 1-lb. jars, $4.50.

MARMALADES—Orange and Grapefruit

JAMS—Fig, Peach, Grape, Strawberry and Blackberry

Backwards and Forwards

You grocers know the ups and downs of the breakfast food business. You know how dozens and dozens of products have come on the market, filled your shelves and stayed there. Could we possibly point to a more convincing argument in favor of the quality of Egg-O-See and E-C Corn than the fact that the sales of both are constantly growing.

Egg-O-See Cereal Company
QUINCY CHICAGO BUFFALO

$3.00 FROM $1.50

James T. Shinn's Liquid Rennet has been on the market so long that it seems hardly necessary to speak of its quality; most people know it as the finest, cleanest rennet made.

Not all grocers know that they can double their money on this specialty, however—an unusual chance with an article so high-grade.

Costs $1.50 per dozen, brings back $3.00.

HERE IS YOUR QUESTION ANSWERED

Why put in Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa when you are selling five brands now? Well, because it is different from the rest, for one reason. It is the only cocoa packed in glass. It stands alone, and you know how novelty helps a thing to sell. The grocer who infuses a little novelty into his business is the grocer who succeeds.

Another thing, Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa is better than the rest. That isn't a bluff, honestly. We take out of our cocoa, in the making, a substance which other manufacturers allow in, greatly to the injury of the flavor of their goods.

Now do you know why you should sell it?

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

40 cents a pound

Packed in ½-lb. jars, 6 and 12-lb. boxes

CROFT & ALLEN CO. Philadelphia PENNSYLVANIA

Do You Know What Ramly Stands For?

We'll tell you—the finest Turkish cigarette ever made to sell for 10 cents. It is the one that is so widely imitated by our competitors.

If you want particular smokers to come to you, put the Ramly in stock.

WILL YOU BE OUR CORN FLAKE JURY?

There are several brands of Corn Flakes on the market; some sell well—some fairly well—and others only sell now and then.

It's up to you to decide which is the best for you to sell.

Decide for your customers' interests and your own at the same time.

Just put a sample of each Corn Flake side by side, and the test will always come out in favor of Malta-Vita Corn Flakes. This means satisfaction to your customers.

Now, our big Free Deal of 1 Case Free with 7 is of interest to you. It means extra profit for you.

Profit is what you want, profit is what you'll get if you'll only order before our Free Deal expires—May 15.

Our package is bigger and better than any 10-cent package on the market.

Order through your jobber to-day.

"GET SOME"

You Can't Have Your Own Brand

It isn't practicable for the average dealer to have his own brand of pork and beans—he must sell proprietary brands. There are very many—which shall he send out to represent his store.

Naturally, the easiest sold and the best. Van Camp's Pork and Beans are easiest sold because they are the most advertised; that's a question of fact—look at the magazines.

It's the best because—well, you be the judge. Compare it with any brand you like and judge it hard both by eye and palate.

Do You Want to Make $300 More Every Year?

It is a mighty nice thing to be able to increase your profits by such a tidy sum as $300 a year on an investment of less than $20, but that is what you can do if you will put in an Acme Peanut Roaster (equipped for kerosene, gas or gasoline), the simplest and cheapest automatic roaster made. Anybody can operate it. There is nothing to get out of order and little or no expense in running it.

Give your customers a chance to buy freshly roasted peanuts and you will make from $1 to $3 a day. We would like to tell you more about it.

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

Specialties Like This Boom Trade

Winorr Corn is canned corn in the sense that it is corn packed in a can, but it is not canned corn in the ordinary sense at all.

Canned corn means corn packed with the hulls on. Good, nevertheless? Yes until you taste Winorr, which is packed without the hulls.

Winorr Corn is a delicious specialty — just the tender, delicious, milky kernels of fancy sugar corn.

You can sell it just as surely as thousands of other grocers do.

There's Enough FOR YOUR Customers

If all people knew what "Leaf" Lard means, we couldn't supply the demand for it.

There is but one piece of Leaf Fat in each hog—not enough to supply one-tenth of the people—most of the lard that's used must be made from other hog fats.

But you can sell your customers "Simon-pure Leaf Lard.

If you are after Quality trade, better stock "Simon-pure" to-day.

Do you know how cheap Electricity is? Ever think of using it to Grind Coffee? Ask the Manager of the nearest Power House. He will post you on the convenience and economy of Electricity in your business. An will save your clerks' time, your customers' time, and advertise your store. Write for catalogue describing our various Electric Mills, with capacities for granulating from four ounces to nine pounds of coffee per minute.

The illustration shows our double mill No. 08712, with motor for direct current; one mill fitted with grinders for granulating, and the other for pulverizing. Each iron hopper holds six pounds of coffee. There are two speeds, fast and slow, which can be instantly changed from one to the other; at fast speed this mill granulates three pounds of coffee per minute. Fitted with ¾ H. P. motor for direct current, or with ½ H. P. motor for alternating current. The latter for slow speed only. Can be regulated while running for grinding either fine or coarse.

We will gladly give any information desired about these mills.

of your requirements we want your coupon book business. Makes no difference whether you want few or many. We are greatly pleased with the large number of new people, who in 1907, began using our

and have apparently settled down to their continuous use. The convenience of the INDEX appeals to them.

100,000 MORE BOOKS SOLD IN 1907 THAN 1906

Write for free samples and then send in an order. They do not cost much and after you learn their merits you will be glad to use them through 1908 and as much longer as you are in business.

A Household Word

If you were to say to any woman who came into your store, "What is Ariosa?" She would answer instantly, "Why that's Arbuckles' Coffee." Why? There is only ONE answer. It is the best package coffee ever sold at the price, and it is the most extensively advertised. Ariosa is a product you don't have to sell, you simply put it in stock and take orders for it.

A Fixture You Need

Our Five-jar Fixture, one of the useful and ornamental fixtures you can have. Made in both oak and cherry, 3-coat finish. No old style hinges; but the lids lift and spring to right, thus completely exposing the contents.

Occupies no more room than a 4-jar fixture, is a silent salesman, and helps to make a grocer proud of his store. All trimmings nickeled.

What the Prophet Says

A man with some reputation as a prophet says the grocery store of the future will sell absolutely no goods in bulk.

Naturally, excepting produce.

No weighing, no measuring, no grubbing.

Everything in ready-weighed, ready-wrapped packages, saving the dealer work, saving him overweight, saving him dirt and beautifying his shelves—giving the consumer clean food in sanitary sealed packages, uncontaminable by other things.

We believe it. A most surprising percentage of our granulated sugar business is done to-day in Franklin Cartons. Every year sees an increase. Moreover, the carton business we get we keep. For no grocer who once started to sell Franklin Carton Sugar has ever been known to go back to barrels.

Clean, sanitary cartons that preserve strength and freshness. Two-pound cartons and 2, 5, 10, 25, 50 and 100-pound cotton bags : : :

How to Answer Their Questions

Put a box of I-V Washing Tablets on your counter. They will be such a novelty that every woman who comes in will ask what they are and what they will do. Tell them this:—

1—They contain no acid of any sort.
2—They wash clothes without rubbing.
3—They make clothes beautifully white;
4—They can be used in hard water;
5—They take stains from table linen without any rubbing whatever.

Any one of these points would sell a package—just see the women's eyes glisten when you name them all.

THE ONE WAY TO BEAT BABBITT'S

BABBITT'S BEST LAUNDRY SOAP is not only our best—it is your best, too.

The grocers who sell BABBITT'S BEST will find, if they average the sales of all their laundry soaps, that BABBITT'S BEST has always stood at the head. It has a place in the household that only one thing could displace.

That one thing is this—if somebody could find a soap to do better work, BABBITT'S BEST might have to yield. Nobody has come within a mile of finding it yet, however.

Positively The Best Wagon Ever Built For the Grocery Trade

Strong, Easy-Running, Finest Steel Tires, Wheels Second-Growth Hickory

This wagon is exceedingly handsome and almost everlasting. There are more "J. M." wagons in use in Philadelphia than all other makes combined. We have a number of them ready for your name and colors.

Tell us your ideas of a wagon, we will send you a catalogue in which you will find something very much like it. If it isn't there, we will build it for you.

THEY WILL WALK BLOCKS OUT OF THEIR WAY TO GET THEM

When a woman gets hold of a broom that lasts two or three times as long as the ones she has been buying, she will walk blocks out of her way to get that kind of a broom again.

We are making this kind of brooms only. Try a dozen, tell your trade that they are the finest ever put on the market and CHIPMAN BROOMS will keep people coming to your store regularly, if nothing else will. $2.25 per doz. is our price for a broom that retails for 25c., and any one of your customers will pay 30c. for them and be satisfied.

DOLLARS IN RETAILERS' POCKETS

Hundreds of Manufacturers and Jobbers of High-grade Standard Selling Goods are offering

as an inducement to push the sales of their goods to consumers. These certificates are given at no increase in the selling prices, or cheapening of quality in their products, but are intended solely as a compensation for your assistance, and are exchangeable through us for valuable and useful merchandise, of which the following list represents a few of the

1000 ARTICLES TO CHOOSE FROM

Pianos	Harness	Buggies	Silverware	Typewriters	Scales	Lamps
Coffee Mills	Safes	Leather Goods	Strong Boxes	Wagons	Trucks
Desks	Tools	Chinaware	Jewelry	Furniture	Sporting Goods
Rubber Goods	Watches	Cut Glass	Toilet Articles	Trunks	Rugs	Clocks

Any retailer taking advantage of this liberal offer is simply putting extra dollars into his pocket, as the cost to him is absolutely nothing but represents a saving of 15 to 60 per cent. over the cost if he were to buy them in the regular retail way.

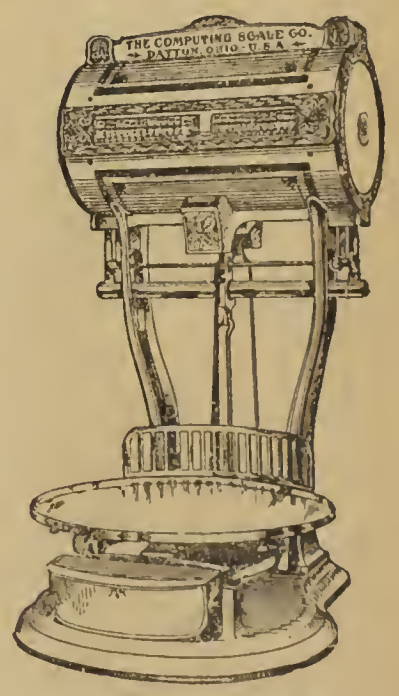
No Argument Against Facts

Success in merchandising is a result of close attention to the little things and the application of methods which have been proven efficient by actual experience.

If your present system is subject to losses by errors in computation or the giving of overweight, remember that it is your money and your merchandise that is getting away from you.

We offer you our services gratis for the purpose of showing you where the losses occur, and how they can be successfully prevented.



We make no claims or statements regarding

The firms advertising on this page are all well known; their products are the best on the market and all bring you UNIVERSAL COUPONS

"One Ounce of Prevention Is Worth a Pound of Cure"

If you will tell your customers to use the product pictured here, on their floors it will make them look like new and it will preserve them. A floor treated with Moore's Wax will last twice as long as one that isn't. Your customers are getting this wax from paint stores. You might as well have this money. Besides the big profit, every case contains Universal Coupons for you and your customers.

Take Your Choice

Let us assume that two concerns are making Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels.

One of them cares nothing for you, does all of its work on your customers to make them demand that you should handle the goods, whether they pay you a profit or not.

The other goes straight to you, works with you to make you want to sell the goods, spends its advertising money with you, gives you Universal Coupons to make the goods more interesting, and does everything possible to make you a friend instead of a lackey.

Whose goods are you going to sell?

Our Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels are as good as our bread.

A Canned Goods Revolution

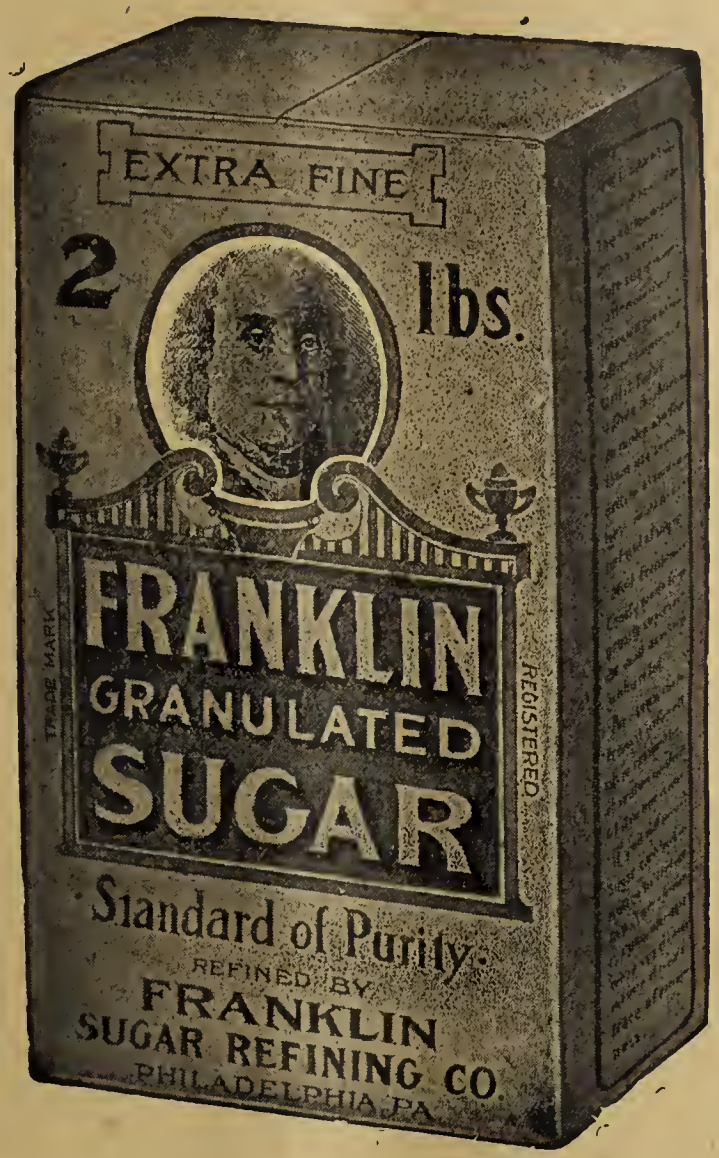
In packing Onarga Country Gentleman corn we use a method of cooking which has already partly revolutionized the canning industry of this country.

Until the automatic cooker was invented it wasn't possible to cook corn evenly. Cook the edges of a can just right and the centre would be raw. Cook the centre right and the edges had all the goodness cooked out.

In Onarga Country Gentleman corn the can is cooked to the same degree throughout. The flavor and the added tenderness tells you the difference instantly. So does the appearance. This corn really has very little competition.

IROQUOIS CANNING CO., Onarga, Ills.

For Grocers



This is a picture of a sales-book we have designed especially for grocers. It permits the duplicate to remain in the book without interfering with new entries—an important thing for those who take orders from house to house.

Three sizes—A1, A1 Special and A2.

The pads consist of 50 printed sheets for original bills (usually white) and 50 unprinted duplicate sheets (usually yellow). They are all perforated and easily detached; any sheet can be taken out without disturbing the others. The covers are light; handy for the pocket; no wire or metal to catch and tear the clothes. The impression sheet holder at the bottom is a device so constructed that it admits of the sheet being put in the proper place with a pencil instead of the fingers. It is fitted with a book opener: can be worked either from top sheet to bottom, or bottom to top. It is the easiest to operate and the most complete duplicating order book on the market, and it is the only one made of 40-pound book paper instead of ordinary newspaper.

¶ Unless all signs fail we are going to have very large crops of all fruits this year.

¶ That means lots of preserving and a big demand for sugar.

¶ As a rule grocers don't look forward with much interest to a "big demand for sugar," because it means increased work at no profit.

¶ What shall it profit a man if he sells a hundred barrels of sugar and gets back only what he paid for it?

¶ Sell Franklin Carton Sugar instead of bulk sugar and your views will change, for there is no work required in selling Franklin Carton Sugar. You don't even need to wrap it. And there is a good profit, and what there is you can't waste through the overweight—"good measure"—that always goes with sugar in bulk.

Clean, sanitary cartons that preserve strength and freshness. Two-pound cartons and 2, 5, 10, 25, 50 and 100-pound cotton bags : : :

Anybody Can Make a "Silver Polish," But—

Of all the legions of silver polishes only one is known in two hemispheres, or known half so well in this hemisphere, where it is made, as Electro-Silicon.

We have spent a fortune advertising Electro-Silicon, of course, which is one reason for its popularity, but it would never have held that popularity, over hundreds of other polishes, had it been simply an ordinary silver polish.

For anybody can make a "silver polish," and with such a simple product it requires unique merit to get a commanding position and hold it.

Electro-Silicon will give results 50 per cent. better and easier, as a metal and general polish, than any other polish in the world. Know it always by the yellow box and the woman in red on the lid.

The Quickest Way to Turn $2 into $2.50

Is to get twenty packages of "FORCE" into your Store. It sells at 2 for 25 cts.

YOU don't have to talk about "FORCE" to sell it. Everybody knows it. Everybody buys it. Everybody eats it.

Have it where everybody can see it, and you will find it going out in more orders than any other breakfast food. The average profit is 33⅓ per cent. You can't make that on others and can't please as many customers, either.

"Show All—Sell All"

This is the idea of a store like this. Notice that everything is where customers can see it. These bins protect you from loss by dust, dirt or bugs. A bin full of sugar shows it is sugar, makes people want sugar, and keeps every grain of sugar in clean, salable condition. Let us make an estimate for you.

The Cloven Foot of a Pharisee Grocer

Gimbel Brothers, Proprietors of the Only Good Grocery Store in Philadelphia, Bitterly Condemn Preservatives in Catsups and Warn Consumers Against Them, While at the Same Time Selling Preserved Catsup Under Their Own Label.

In their newspaper advertisements for April 30, 1908, Gimbel Bros., the only straight and conscientious grocers in Philadelphia, in fact, the only grocers in the entire country who always consider their customers and never themselves, featured the following on preservatives in food:—

DON'T EAT POISONS AND DRUGS.

Condiments are the goad to jaded appetite, at best—in other words, are not the system builders. In fair health, the human body isn't injured by their use—as the big normal man is not injured by an occasional cigar; but that's all that can be said.

Now don't aggravate matters by using catsups and such things that are "doctored" by the addition of drugs or dyes or chemicals.

We talked this over with a big food packer. He said, "to make catsups of fresh, sound tomatoes, as they must be made if no preservatives are used, will make them costly. Gimbel's are going altogether too far. All classes must be supplied—you mustn't run up the food bill of the people."

And that nice talk was pure buncombe—talk to continue a market for cannery refuse and waste.

Here are the facts:—

The average family doesn't use over 75 cents' worth of catsup a year. We sell pure catsups at almost exactly the same prices charged everywhere for uncertain sorts—not over two cents a bottle advance over the meanest sorts.

This was followed by an extremely glowing advertisement for Heinz's catsups and other goods, the point of the connection being that the Heinz Co., alone of all catsup manufacturers, claim to be able to make catsup without a preservative.

Now, one would think, after reading the above attack on preservatives, including the statement by a catsup maker that any excuse for preservatives was "pure buncombe," and the warning to consumers to buy pure catsup and leave alone those containing preservatives, that Gimbel Bros. would not touch a preserved catsup with a ten-foot pole. Certainly if they were honest and consistent they could not do so after publishing the above as their platform on preservatives.

Yet Gimbel Bros' own private brand of catsup, the Lenox brand, is preserved with benzoate of soda, as clearly appears from the label. After the above advertisement had appeared the "Grocery World" sent a representative to the Gimbel store to buy a bottle of the concern's own brand of catsup. Conspicuously across the lower front part of the label appeared the following sticker:—

TOMATO CATSUP
Prepared with 1-10 of 1 per cent
BENZOATE OF SODA PACKED FOR GIMBEL BROS.
PHILADELPHIA.

Around the neck of the bottle appears the following: This label (Lenox label) on any of our goods is a guarantee that they are the best of their kind."

In their advertisement Gimbel Bros. say that drugs and preservatives in catsup are "poison in food"; that all talk about preservatives being necessary is "pure buncombe—talk to continue a market for cannery refuse and waste."

Benzoate of soda is a drug and a preservative. Their own brand of catsup contains it and they guarantee it to be the "best of its kind." If all that they say in their advertisement is true, what else are they than unspeakable frauds for selling preserved catsup and for guaranteeing it superior to all others?

If what they say in their advertisement is not true, and preserved catsup is really an innocent article, then the Gimbels are shameless liars by any standard used to judge them.

Nor is this all. The "Grocery World" has evidence that after the above advertisement appeared, and when a certain person went to the Gimbel grocery department for a bottle of Heinz's catsup, the clerk used great effort to persuade the person referred to buy a bottle of preserved Lenox catsup instead.

This hypocritical method of doing business is exactly on a par with what the Gimbels did on glucose—attacking it as a harmful and injurious adulteration when used in candy, though freely selling it as an ingredient of syrup.

Consumers' Package of Process Butter Must be Labeled.

Notice has been given by the Treasury Department through the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that process butter will have to be branded and sold as such whether in tubs or in prints. The law compelling process butter in tubs to be stamped has been fairly well observed, but there has been a great laxity in selling process butter in prints without branding it. All this spring while butter was high a great deal of process has been worked out as fresh creamery. Many receivers who had a large stock of wrappers labeled process for use in prints had but little call for them. When buyers took process in tubs they did not call for the wrappers. Under the terms of the law it is necessary to brand all process butter in letters about an inch high. Many of the prints are stamped with letters of that height but the type is so narrow and light that it is not very noticeable. When renovated butter is found that is not marked as such it will be seized, as a failure to have it marked will be considered evidence that no tax had been paid. It will be treated the same as oleo. The label must be on the butter until the consumer has it in his possession.

Sardine Packers, at Odds, Withdraw Prices.

All Future Quotations on Domestic Sardines Recalled. Packers Couldn't Agree on what Future Prices Should be and Compromised in a Way which Killed Business.

A squabble has arisen among the packers of domestic sardines, all of whom are subsidized and controlled by a central company, and as a result all future prices on the standard grades of domestic sardines were withdrawn last Tuesday. The difference arose over the packers' varying ideas as to what future prices should be. Some thought they ought to be higher than the $3.10 for quarter oils, f. o. b. Eastport, which was named, in order that holders of spot stocks might get out before new goods came forward. Other packers contended that about $3 for quarter oils should be named, regardless of the spot holders. The compromise which was finally adopted killed about nine-tenths of the normal future business. A price of $3.10 was named, but in the circular which accompanied the price-list the statement was made that "we expect lower prices in August" Naturally with this before them, buyers stood off and only a small percentage of the usual future business was done.

The prices and the prophecy of lower prices in August are now withdrawn together, and after a meeting of the packers this week they will try it again.

The Greek Currant Advertising Campaign Begins.

Initial Announcement of the Series by which the Greek Syndicate Hope to Increase the Consumption of Currants in this Country.

In a recent issue it was stated that the Greek currant syndicate, in order to increase the general consumption of currants, would shortly begin advertising the merits of currants throughout this country and several others.

The first of these advertisements appeared in the May number of the Ladies' Home Journal and was as follows:—

Ask Your Baker for CURRANT BREAD
Wholesome–Nutritious–Palatable
NOTE: When buying currants for home use insist on getting fresh goods.

Behind such advertising so general and indirect as this, there must truly be great faith. Currant bread is an ordinary thing—any baker can bake it. The idea of this advertisement is that consumers will demand currant bread of their bakers, who to fill those demands will be obliged to use currants. The "note" at the bottom is also destined to increase the consumption, by compelling grocers to keep a fresh stock.

It would seem like a far cry to the time when advertising so indefinite as this could show an increase in the amount of currants consumed in this country.

Warm Controversy Between California Dried Fruit Men and Wholesale Grocers

Former have Contrived to Force Jobbers to Sign an Extremely Drastic Contract. Jobbers Refuse and Deadlock Results. Names of Members of Dried Fruit Association and Copy of Their Contract.

A serious conflict seems imminent between the dried fruit packers of California and the wholesale grocers of the entire country over the exceedingly drastic sales contract which the dried fruit men are asking the jobbers to sign. The Dried Fruit Association is engineering that end of the controversy, and various jobbers' associations, including the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, have taken the matter up and are opposing the contract very vigorously.

The Dried Fruit Association is a strong combination of practically all the leading dried fruit men of the coast. The list of members is as follows:—

J. K. Armsby, the J. K. Armsby Co., 527 Howard street; Fred. G. Baker, J. B. Inderrieden Co., Monadnock Building; W. A. Banks, North Ontario Packing Co., 935 E. Third street; Chas. Bonner, Madison & Bonner, 112 Market street; R. I. Bentley, California Fruit Canners' Association, 120 Market street; R. M. Butler, Napa Fruit Co., Napa, Cal.; A. E. Castle, Castle Bros., 1444 O'Farrell street; J. W. Chilton, J. W. Chilton & Co., San Jose, Cal.; Alex. Goldstein, Phœnix Packing Co., 116 Davis street; L. L. Gray, Fresno Home Packing Co., Fresno Cal.; C. W. Griffin, Griffin & Skelley Co., 1001 Franklin street; D. J. Guggenhime, Guggenhime & Co., 126 Davis street; L. F. Giffen, L. F. Giffen & Co., Fowler, Cal.; Geo. N. Herbert, Geo. H. Herbert & Co., San Jose, Cal.; C. C. Kinsey, Johnson Locke Mercantile Co., 213 Sansome street; Frank Lyman, Frank Lyman Co., Fresno, Cal.; H. E. Losse, H. E. Losse & Co., San Jose, Cal.; J. F. Niswander, Malaga Packing Co., Malaga, Cal.; Willis Pike, Willis Pike, Fresno, Cal.; Abe Rosenberg, Rosenberg Bros. & Co., 269 Brannan street; F. A. Schneider, Jr., Warren Dried Fruit Co., San Jose, Cal.

These have combined to compel the wholesale grocers to sign the following contract, which must be executed by both parties whenever a sale is made:—

Party signing this contract as buyer, and hereinafter called buyer, has this day bought, and the Fresno Home Packing Co., hereinafter called seller, has this day sold California dried fruits as per quantities, varieties, style of packages, prices, routing, destination, and time of shipment, named on reverse side of this contract, on terms and conditions hereinafter stated, prices F. O. B. Pacific coast common shipping points.

Terms.—Cash, less 1½ per cent. if draft (with documents) is paid within ten days from date thereof, otherwise net cash on arrival of goods, payable in New York, Chicago or San Francisco Exchange.

Routing.—Seller's option, except that buyer may name delivering line on carload shipments.

Responsibility. — Notwithstanding shipped to seller's order, goods are at risk of buyer from and after delivery to carrier, and buyer hereby assumes responsibilities as to shortage, loss, delay or damage in transit upon issuance by carrier of clean bill of lading or shipping receipt.

Quality.—Equal to or better than average of the grade for the section where grown and of the current season at time of shipment, unless otherwise specified. Goods sold on sample to be equal to or better than sample.

Complaints.—If shipment is not accepted or disapproved within three days after arrival, contract shall be considered fully complied with on seller's part, and invoice, if unpaid, becomes immediately due and payable. Buyer shall not be entitled to refuse to pay for or to receive any separable lot or any portion of goods shipped hereunder, for failure of any other lot or portion of the order to comply with contract.

Liability.—Seller not liable for loss or damage due to short shipment resulting from or contributed to by fire, floods, destruction of or serious damage to crops or any unavoidable casualty, save that a proportionate delivery shall be made to all buyers, without discrimination, from the suitable stock coming to, or remaining in seller's possession.

Should seller be obstructed or delayed in the fulfillment of any portion of this contract by any of the aforementioned causes, or by strikes, and, or the failure of transportation facilities, then the time herein fixed for the fulfillment of this contract shall be extended for a period equivalent to the time lost by reason of any or all of the causes aforesaid.

Weights.—Goods sold in cartons or bags are sold gross for net. No allowance shall be made except for shortage of average weights in excess of 1 per cent. Package weights of figs are nominal.

Arbitration.—Disagreement as to any matter of fact arising out of this contract to be settled by arbitration. Buyer and seller each to select one arbitrator, who, if unable to agree, shall jointly select the third. The decision and award of a majority of said arbitrators shall be binding and complied with by all parties hereto. The party against whom decision is rendered shall pay arbitration fees and expenses incurred. If decision is rendered that the seller has complied with contract, invoice, if unpaid, shall become due and payable at once. When decision is rendered against the seller, arbitrators shall determine and fix amount of allowance, which amount shall be deducted from the invoice, and the correct net amount paid immediately. If payment shall already have been made, the amount or allowance awarded shall be immediately refunded. If arbitrators decide that seller has not shown good faith in making delivery hereunder, buyer

How We Sell Oats

This is the way we have adopted to increase our business—hold up the quality of MOTHER'S OATS as high as it possibly can be, at the same time making the grocer eager to sell it by assuring him a good profit.

24,000,000 packages of MOTHER'S OATS were consumed in this country in the past eight months.

At a Minimum of 12c. per Package

Does this look like unwillingness to pay a fair price, when it gets quality?

shall be entitled to another tender.

Samples for arbitration shall be drawn from not less than 5 per cent. of shipment. No unimportant variation in the execution of this contract shal constitute basis for a claim.

In the event of failure of seller to ship, it shall be considered as a dispute to be submitted and settled by arbitration.

Copy of this contract, properly signed by buyer, must be delivered to seller at Fresno, California, within fifteen days from the date hereof, and must be accepted and signed by seller before the same shall be binding on it.

This is quite too rich for the jobbers' blood and the general refusal to sign has practically blocked future business up to this time. A number of the Philadelphia jobbers met at the Grocers' and Importers' Exchange a few days ago and pledged themselves not to accept the agreement. The National Wholesale Grocers' Association has now taken the matter up and will endeavor to secure some concessions from the Dried Fruit Association.

The Grocers' and Importers Exchange has prepared a memorial pointing out its reasons for objecting to the contract. After reproducing the text of the contract, the Exchange states:—

Terms.—Cash, less 1½ per cent. if paid within ten days, or net cash on arrival. We think a difference of ½ of 1 per cent. would be fair. We believe the contract should not read payable in New York, Chicago or San Francisco funds.

Routing.—The party who pays the freight should have the right to route.

Responsibility. — This paragraph we believe is at variance with the law, according to which buyers cannot be held responsible until the title is passed over to them.

Liability.—Where the contract can be extended by the seller under certain conditions.

Arbitration that allows the seller to deliver goods other than contract without the consent of the buyer and the seller to pay the difference in value as determined by arbitration.

That the arbitrators shall decide if the buyer is entitled to another tender, if it is shown that sellers have not acted in good faith, unless due allowance is made for the later delivery.

If seller fails to ship, it shall be settled by arbitration.

It was also unanimously resolved that the secretary send the result of the action of this meeting to the different grocery jobbing organizations of the United States and ask them to join with us in protesting against this contract, and also to notify the California Dried Fruit Association, the "Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin" and the "American Grocer" of our action.

Practically no limas have come forward up to the present time, barring the few packages previously noted.

Many Prosecutions for Short Weight Bread Sales.

Secretary Kane, of the Allegheny Retail Merchants' Association, Puts the Matter Up to Pittsburg Mayor.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Allegheny, Pa., May 8, 1908.

As secretary of the Merchants' Protective Association of this city, which, as reported in the "Grocery World," has been waging a fight against grocers and bakers who sold short-weight bread, I have this week sent to the Mayor of Pittsburg the following communication:—

Pittsburg, Pa., May 5, 1908.

Hon. Geo. W. Guthrie,
Mayor, Pittsburg, Pa.

Dear Sir:—In compliance with your request, I herewith inclose a list of bakers and grocers that are violating the law of this Commonwealth by selling loaf bread otherwise than by the pound avoirdupois, and the city ordinance of Pittsburg by selling loaf bread weighing less than two pounds avoirdupois, as set forth in this ordinance.

By this city ordinance each person is subject to a fine of $5 for each loaf sold weighing less than two pounds avoirdupois, and under the Act of 1797 each violator is subject to a fine of $10 for selling loaf bread otherwise than by weight. One-half of the fine goes to the prosecutor and one-half to the Commonwealth under this act. I have no desire to prosecute these violators to secure this portion of the fine, nor do I believe that this great Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is hard up and in need of money, judging from the statement published by the newly-elected treasurer.

This list of bakers on the North Side was taken from last year's city directory and given to two disinterested parties to purchase loaf bread where and when they pleased, and when the bread was delivered to me it contained nothing but a number, making it impossible for me to know whose loaf of bread I had when I weighed them on the United States testing scales in Superintendent Smith's office of the North Side Market.

After the bread was weighed the list was returned to me by the disinterested parties and the name, address, date of purchase and weight was recorded, and suit brought before Alderman McDowell. Many of the so-called cut-rate grocers had special sales on bread April 25th. One grocer offered 1,000 5-cent loaves of bread at 3 cents. I had bread purchased at all these stores and found them selling 12½, 13 and 14-ounce loaves. I fully agree with you that the bread I showed you yesterday was far below the quality furnished the inmates at the poor farm, having seen them bake bread and sampled it.

In these hard times the public and merchants should be protected more so than any other time, as many of the poor people have all they can do to buy bread, let alone receive from three to four ounces less in a loaf than is sold in other cities at the same price, and by other dealers in our own city.

Trusting you will give this your prompt attention and have the city ordinance officer enforce the ordi-

Stearin Can be Used in Lard.

Federal Bureau of Animal Industry Grants Permission to Use Five Per Cent. Without Disclosure on the Label, Ten Per Cent. if Special Label is Used, and More than Ten Per Cent. if the Fact is Stated on the Label.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 7, 1908.

The Bureau of Animal Industry of the United State Department of Agriculture has just handed down a ruling which will prove a great boon to all lard manufacturers during the coming summer. It grants permission to use 5 per cent. of stearin in lard. Stearin is a hardening substance and helps lard to stand up during the warm weather. Even 10 per cent. can be used under certain conditions.

The text of the ruling is as follows:—

For a period of more than a year your Committee to Confer with Government Officials has been contending that an added amount of lard stearin in pure lard should be permitted.

This office is in receipt of the following from the Department of Agriculture:—

"Pure lard may have added thereto not to exceed 5 per cent. of lard stearin without the presence of added stearin being shown on the label.

"Pure lard may have added thereto more than 5 per cent. and not to exceed 10 per cent. of lard stearin without the presence of added stearin being shown on the label, provided the product is distinctly labeled: 'Pure lard prepared especially for use in hot climates.'

"Pure lard may have added thereto more than 10 per cent. of lard stearin, provided the product is distinctly labeled to show the presence of added stearin.

"All labels shall be submitted to the Department for approval, in accordance with Section 2, Regulation 18, of B. A. I. Order 150.

A. D. MELVIN,
Chief of Bureau."

Retailers will therefore understand that the statement on the label "Pure lard prepared especially for use in hot climate," means that 10 per cent. of stearin is present.

Rio Coffee Shipped to America as Santos

The Incentive is that Santos Rules One and One-half Cents Above Corresponding Grades of Rio. Syndicate's Corner of Fine Santos Coffee has Brought this About. How the Scheme is Worked and How it Can be Detected.

The fact that Santos coffee is now ruling considerably higher then corresponding grades of Rio has brought into existence a new form of coffee fraud—the shipping of Rio coffee to this country as Santos. The scheme is doing much to upset the importing trade of the entire country.

As has been several times reported, the Brazilian syndicate has very largely cornered the supply of good Santos coffee. The syndicate holds several million bags of coffee and so large a part of this is fine Santos that good and medium grades have advanced about 1½ cents per pound above corresponding grades of Rio. Usually the two rule about together.

The canny coffee shippers of Santos are taking advantage of this condition in a way which is causing American coffee importers much trouble. All Santos coffee is shipped out of the port of Santos, though none of it is actually grown in Santos. The shippers, soon learning that coffee denominated Santos brought more money in this country than that denominated Rio, have shipped large quantities of Rio coffee via Santos and labeled Santos. In some cases this is not straight Rio, but is what is known as border coffee, being coffee with a Rio twang. This is usually classed with straight Rio and is ordinarily never shipped via Santos. Shipments of straight Rio are being made in the same way.

The fraud is almost impossible to detect unless the coffee is put in the cup. Green Rio and Santos coffee are almost identical in appearance, and only when roasted and brewed does the striking difference appear. Santos has a sweet, smooth flavor, while Rio is heavy and rank.

More Inconsistency.

The inexplicable inconsistency which has marked the methods of the three manufacturers who have boycotted the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association is being noticed in other sections than Philadelphia. The curious manifestations this inconsistency has taken are familiar to every reader of this paper. The Toasted Corn Flakes Co. has been given credit for more consistency than either of the other two, because when it cut off the Retail Grocers' Association it also cut off every Philadelphia chain store. Neither the Shredded Wheat Co. or Procter & Gamble did.

It now appears that even if the Toasted Corn Flakes Co. has been consistent in Philadelphia, its attitude outside of Philadelphia is not consistent at all. The "Grocery World" received the following letter during the week:—

New York, N. Y., May 5, 1908.
The "Grocery World,"
Philadelphia, Pa.

Gentlemen:—We have read with a great deal of interest your remarks regarding local conditions in Philadelphia and were rather amused to notice the inclosed advertisement of Siegel, Cooper and Co's, which shows the local conditions in New York to be entirely different than they are in Philadelphia.

Yours very truly,

* * * * *

Inclosed was a clipping from the current advertisement of Siegel, Cooper & Co., New York department storekeepers, which contained, among other things, the following:—

TOASTED CORN FLAKES
New shipment (600 cases) just received; regular 10c. package....5c.

From which it would appear that the Toasted Corn Flakes Co. sells Siegel, Cooper & Co., retailers, while refusing to sell the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association and the Philadelphia chain stores—because they are retailers. And further, that it permits the New York concern to cut the retail price in half.

How can a concern that thus brazenly gives the preference to a cut-price department store dare to expect consideration from a legitimate retail grocer!

A Fight Dominated by Greed.

The local jobbers who some time ago opened a campaign against the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association had two plans of attack open to them. Their antagonist was an incorporated body of over seven hundred grocers, embodying probably 80 per cent. of the live trade of Philadelphia outside of chain stores. It was buying in enormous quantities, handling probably $2,000,000 of goods a year, discounting every bill—in short was a strong, compact business organization.

The Wholesale Grocers' Association had two ways of curtailing the power of this organization. One was to recognize it as a jobber, which by every proper test it is, and on limited priced goods to bind it up with other jobbers to hold the price. That plan would have recognized the association's right to sell goods, but would have put it out of its power to disorganize the trade by selling contract goods below the price at which other jobbers could sell them.

The other plan was to refuse to recognize the Retail Grocers' Association as a legitimate organization; to deny its right to sell goods, or to live along its present lines. In a word, to crush it if possible.

The first plan would have made a virtue of necessity, admitted the force of the competition, but restricted it so that on limited priced goods at least its power for harm would be gone. The second plan would in its very essence be characterized by pure greed and selfishness—the spirit of the dog of the fable who lost one bone by greedily reaching after what he thought was a larger one.

Nevertheless the second plan is the one which the Philadelphia jobbers adopted. In cold blood a few of them—because the organization which is nominally waging the fight is hopelessly divided within itself—started out to destroy an association much more powerful than any of its individual antagonists, an organization that had an undoubted right to exist and do business, a right only denied because it took some of the complainants' trade. Naturally the plan has failed. Practically only two jobbing concerns are to-day vigorously fighting the Retail Grocers' Association—Howell & Bursk and William M. Montgomery & Co., and they have not only failed to accomplish what they set out to do, but they have seriously injured their own business, particularly Montgomery & Co., who have been inordinately offensive. The jobbers have had what appeared upon the surface to be three small successes, but in every one of these cases the new condition which they have introduced has left themselves and the general jobbing trade worse off than before. Particularly because they removed all restriction as to the association's selling price.

This fight might have succeeded along the first line, for the Retail Grocers' Association would have agreed to it instantly. It will never succeed along the second, for everybody despises a man or a cause wherein fairness and intelligence are overridden by greed.

Strange Bedfellows.

Food laws make strange bedfellows. Before the writer lies a New Orleans molasses label used by a well-known and thoroughly reputable local house. To one side, at the bottom, appears the words, in heavy black letters:—

Guaranteed Absolutely Pure

Beside this, almost touching it in fact, the following words have been stamped with a rubber stamp:—

CONTAINS SULPHUR DIOXIDE

At first sight these two statements seem totally unreconcilable, yet it is curious that both are legally true. "Absolutely pure" means in its legal sense not chemically pure, but in full compliance with existent food laws. Under the Federal food law a product may contain sulphur dioxide and still be pure, if the quantity of sulphur dioxide used does not make it harmful. It seems now to be thoroughly established that the percentage of sulphur used in molasses does not produce any harmful effect; certainly the Government authorities think so or they would not permit its use.

What Doctors Think of Dr. Wiley.

Touching the extract from the stenographic testimony in a Washington, D. C., food case, published last week, which revealed Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief Government chemist, as a scientific weakling, somebody sends the "Grocery World" an extract from "American Medicine," a physician's journal, published at Detroit, Mich. The following excerpt from it shows how doctors—Chief Wiley is a doctor—look upon their distinguished contemporary:—

> One thing is sure, Dr. Wiley is a disappointment. He has proven to be a very ordinary man with only extraordinary ability for advertising himself and his opinions. If ever a man has worked the lay press for all it is worth, it is this same Dr. Wiley. With a keen sense of humor and a still shrewder sense of opportunity he has played the game for all there was in it. Accuracy, scientific methods and the conservatism that the Government expects of its servants have seemingly been sacrificed for sensationalism and the spectacular. Like the proberbial moth whose short existence is generally brought to a close by some fateful flame, Dr. Wiley is to-day a victim of the lime-light. Intoxicated by its effulgent ray he has basked in it again and again. Discretion, judgment and common sense have apparently been thrown to the winds. Now, the light is fading and when it goes out as it always does, it is to be feared that it will leave a figure weak, frail and broken, more deserving, perhaps, of pity than of censure.

In substantiation of the above came a mass of matter reproducing several of Dr. Wiley's opinions on the food value of alcoholic drinks. In one he declares that "the effect of alcohol on mankind is wholly bad, even in small quantities," that "saloons ought to be abolished"; that "liquor is always bad." In another opinion on the same subject he states that "alcohol has a distinct food vadue up to a certain limit"; that "alcohol up to three ounces is completely oxidized in the average human frame within 24 hours. To that extent it is a food." In another he says that "when the natural elements of whisky mellow and unite you make a beverage which is tonic and wholesome and healthful and non-poisonous." The "Grocery World" seriously considers offering a prize for him who with this evidence before him, will reveal what Dr. Wiley really believes.

Generally familiar is the story of the parrot who when sorely chastised for over-loquacity reflected sadly to himself: "The trouble with you is you talk too —— much." That is also the trouble with Dr. Wiley.

The Rolled Oats Controversy.

The controversy indirectly between the Quaker Oats Co. and the Great Western Cereal Co. over the fixing of the retail price for rolled oats was at first believed to be simply a competitive tempest in a teapot. It has now assumed proportions, however, which show that it will probably develop into a momentous trade question, directly affecting the retail grocery trade of the entire country.

The Great Western Cereal Co's position is that a price of 12 cents for Mother's oats, although higher than the generality of the trade have been charging, is not exorbitant and it is strongly advising retailers everywhere to sell at that figure. The company is refraining from going to the consumers with any price at all, contending as a part of its propaganda that the manufacturer should never fix the retail price. But among the trade it is working hard to establish 12 cents as the retail price of its main product. A number of grocers' associations have commended this stand, but most have paid no official attention to it one way or the other.

The attitude of the Quaker Oats Co. is radically different. It contends that a manufacturer does have a right to fix the retail price, and that the grocer should not object to his fixing it if the price he fixes is reasonably profitable. So believing, the Quaker Oats Co. goes to the limit to advertise a price on its products to consumers. The following advertisement, clipped from last Wednesday's Philadelphia "Evening Bulletin," is a good illustration of its methods:—

No food is more strengthening than whole wheat; none so easily digested as QUAKER
WHEAT BERRIES
(Puffed and baked under 400 degrees Fahrenheit)
To introduce this delicious cereal to you we are offering the ten-cent package for 7c. for a limited time only
Crisp before eating
The Quaker Oats Company
The price on Quaker Oats is now 10c.

Under ordinary conditions a retail price of 10 cents would be low for Quaker oats. The manufacturer admits that and has reduced its wholesale price to a point where it contends retailers can profitably sell at the figure named. No grocers' associations, so far as can be learned, have commended the plan. One or two have condemned it, but by far the greater number have taken no action upon it at all.

The chance is that before this question is settled the associations will have to take notice of it, as will individual grocers everywhere. For several vital principles are involved here: 1, has a manufacturer any right whatever, under any circumstances, to interfere wih the retail price of a product, and is the principle altered if the price he wishes to name is a profitable one? 2, if the manufacturer's right to advertise the retail price to consumers is granted, who should be the judge as to what a fair retail price is, the manufacturer or the grocer?

It is an important question, and it will very shortly take an important place, in the "Grocery World's" judgment.

Strawberries are beginning to come from Virginia and the eastern shore of Maryland. The North Carolina berries, which are reaching their end, range from 12 to 18 cents. Norfolks 12 to 14 cents. The quality is fair and the demand good. Everything points to a heavy Northern crop.

Going After Spurious Fruit Juices. Oleo Men Braced Up by News from London. Fraud in Ironing Wax. Small News of the New York Trade.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, May 8, 1908.

An energetic campaign against the manufacturers and dispensers of spurious fruit juices is being conducted by the health authorities in this and other cities with the co-operation of the New York Fruit Exchange. This was brought out at the annual meeting held by the Exchange Monday evening.

President Victor L. Zorn, in his address, said that the Exchange had turned over to the health board in this city the names of several hundred manufacturers and dealers in imitation fruit juices and samples had been analyzed. Whenever it was proved that the imitations had been sold for real fruit juices the product had been seized and destroyed and a number of prosecutions have been started.

The manufacturers, growing cautious, have begun to label the imitations as imitations, so that the sale of the products, as far as the manufacturers are concerned, becomes legal. The Exchange learned, however, that the imitations are used by the dispensers of various beverages, especially lemonade, and this is illegal, it is claimed, since the consuming public supposes that real fruit juices are used. Accordingly, the Exchange will now get evidence against the dispensers. Efforts will be made to educate the public, when buying lemonade, to insist that the lemon shall be cut and the juice extracted in the presence of the consumer.

A quotation from the London "Lancet" in its issue of February 22, 1908, has been received by the oleomargarine interests with unconcealed satisfaction. The medical paper records that a new Butter and Margarine act has recently gone into effect in London, and as a result there is a scarcity of butter, the price of which has advanced. From this the writer argues that a vast amount of substitutes had been selling for real butter and that the new law will have a highly beneficial effect on the butter industry. Then the writer adds the following, which is the part that pleases the oleo advocates:—

"Meanwhile the public need not suffer any shortage in regard to that most important element in diet, namely, fat. It may be true that genuine butter fat is the most digestible of all fats, but there is little doubt that many of the substitutes are nearly if not quite as god in this respect. Margarine, cottonseed and other vegetable oils and dripping are perfectly wholesome and palatable substances and afford good human food."

A committee of the United Retail Grocers' Association of Brooklyn held a conference Monday with representatives of the State Board of Pharmacy. The immediate purpose was to talk over the sale of ironing wax. The Board has been investigating the sale of various kinds of ironing wax by grocers, it being claimed that these articles are sold as beeswax, although they are most commonly compositions.

The grocers explained that these compositions have been sold for a long time as ironing wax. Sometimes a grocer might call a brand beeswax, not knowing that it contained other ingredients, although he had no intention of deceiving. He sold the article under whatever name it was called by the wholesale dealers, so that if fault is to be found with anybody it should be with them.

Assurance was given by the members of the committee that the grocers' associations are ready to co-operate in every effort to stop deception in the sale of anything sold in grocery stores. It is believed that the committee, by talking over this subject, has led the way to a better understanding with the State Board on a number of subjects.

Two petitions in bankruptcy were filed by groups of creditors Monday against the Buchan's Soaps Corporation, manufacturers of toilet soaps and ointments, with offices at 221 Fifth avenue. Leonard Bronner, who was appointed receiver, with power to continue the business, said that the liabilities are $85,000 and real assets $25,000. Daniel J. Sully, the cotton broker, was the president of the company, which had a capital stock of $1,200,000. It succeeded two years ago the Buchan Toilet Soap Co., which sometime before succeeded the Carbolic Soap Co. Mr. Sully is the son-in-law of the late Philip David M. Thompson, who was president of the original company. A. Edward Glasgow was appointed receiver.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed Tuesday against Gustav Gomprecht, who was in business as the Gomprecht Manufacturing Co., dealers in provisions and manufacturers of sausage at 999 Third avenue. Mr. Gomprecht has been in the business eighteen years and succeeded his father, who started in 1850 and died five years ago, leaving an estate of $300,000. No estimate of the liabilities is given. An effort was made to settle without going into bankruptcy, but this was blocked by a couple of the creditors.

The Southern Match Co., which has offices at 256 Broadway, and a factory at Ronda, N. C., was also brought into the bankruptcy court this week on a petition of creditors, who are officers of the company. George W. Munro, the president, was one of the petitioners, his claim being for $500, money loaned. The treasurer, David C. Myers, was also a petitioner and he claims $5,000, money loaned. The Progressive Supply Co., the third petitioner, has a claim of $1,060 for merchandise. It is stated that the debts amount to $50,000 and that the actual assets are worth $20,000, this amount including the value of real estate, machinery and stock on hand. The company was incorporated in this State four years ago with a capital stock of $100,000. Mr. and Mrs. Mon are said to hold most of the stock. Josiah Cantor was appointed receiver.

A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Abe Solderer, 19 years old, who was in the butter and egg business at 326 Greenwich street, and who owes about $8,000, with no assets in sight except quantities of eggs said to have been transferred to favored creditors.

Matchless Match Co., New York, to manufacture matches; capital stock, $25,000; incorporators, Paul E. Gonon, Thomas O'Connell, Philip Sands, 372 Pearl street.

International Coffee Co., New York, to deal in coffee, tea and spices; capital, $150,000; incorporators, W. J. Hiscox and E. W. Hiscox, 218 East 61st street; W. E. Graham, 16 Grammercy Park.

Zenith Butter and Egg Co., New York, commission merchants; capital, $10,000; incorporators, E. C. Donnelly and John McCloy, Jr., 357 Greenwich street; A. P. Godley.

United Candy Stores, New York, to manufacture confectionery; capital, $5,000; F. W. Mills and H. M. Browne, 154 Nassau street; J. L. Johnston, 21 Wall street.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—ED.]

has written a little book entitled "Useful Hints for Business People." You will each receive a copy of this. Read and digest every line. Then later in the week go all over it again. Every line is a gem. It's a full of business truth and will surely inspire each one of you.

SELLING HAMS.

We'll have to get after the regular hams Monday. We'll put a clean-up price on them of 10½ cents a pound; sell a whole or half one at this figure. Sell them sliced for 22 cents. Just the time for a boiled dinner. What's nicer than a plate of home boiled ham? The spinach is cheap; the new potatoes are plentiful, and there's lots of new bunch beets.

Anyway, we have nearly a hundred hams to sell, so use your best efforts. They're a tender mild-cured ham. Not a bit like the salty flavorless tough things that usually go with a low price.

PLEASE PEOPLE.

That's the whole of it. When a woman goes out of our store pleased we have won her—but for that day only. Your courtesy, your earnestness, your thoroughness must be kept up day by day until it becomes a habit—until it is woven into your very being. Study and practice this art of pleasing people. Don't assume it merely in the store. Carry it home. Let the wife enjoy it. Let the people in the boarding house feel it. Unless you do, it won't become a fixed habit.

LEMONS.

Notice we made 300s lemons $2.85 per box on the wholesale list. That price ought to hit the box trade people. Monday is their day for shopping around. Sell them.

CANNED GOODS SALE.

Preparations will commence in a few days for a big canned goods sale. We will hand you a typewritten list about Wednesday. Our plan is to clean up in a retail way from 150 to 200 cases in .something like three weeks. Inventory comes the last of the month. The success of this sale will largely depend upon the amount of enthusiasm each one of you puts into it. It must be no half-hearted effort. Talk canned goods to everybody. Study your list and get the can, dozen and case prices down fine. Don't be like some drummers that call on us that have to poke into their price-list for every special quotation that is asked. The specialty man that does that isn't on the job.

SPEAKING OF DRUMMERS,

they're a very clever wide-awake set of men generally speaking, and are invariably shown decided deference by this concern, but those of them that are eager about the sale of their own or their competitor's goods, or about the stock on hand, you will hereafter refer them to the management. We prefer not to have them land in this office wise to our doings through a "casual" conversation with one of our clerks.

The Good Old Summer Time is the season when your sliced meat trade is of the greatest importance to you.

People depend more on sliced meats now and less on the heavier meats.

A satisfied customer on sliced meats means a customer on everything else in your store.

Wouldn't you like all the trade of your locality in this line?

Then Why Not Find Out

just what an American Slicing Machine will do for you?

It saves time.
It saves labor.
It saves waste.
It increases profit.
It increases trade.
It has done these things for nine thousand other merchants.
It costs you nothing to investigate.

Fancy Flavoring Extracts

There are plenty other good flavoring extracts on the market—we don't claim a monopoly—but to our mind not even the best has the rich, penetrating strength of Waldorf Lemon and Vanilla.

That is partly a matter of materials, partly a matter of manufacturing methods that economize nowhere where quality can be improved. Flavoring extracts cannot possibly be any better than Waldorf, and none we've ever tested are as good.

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is unchanged throughout. The only development for the week is the opening of the market for new Japans on the same basis as last year. Old teas are held steadily, buying being in small lots, and mostly at full prices. The consumptive demand for tea is fair for the season, but there is no disposition on anybody's part to anticipate it.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee has shown a decided upward tendency during the past week, due to the active support which has been given the market by the syndicate. Spot Santos of medium and good grades is very scarce and the assortment outside of the syndicate's holdings very poor. Mild coffees are steady and unchanged. Java and Mocha steady at ruling prices.

Sugar.

The sugar market is a little weaker. Sales of raws, both Cuban and European, were made at a shade off. The Federal refinery, which can scarcely be accepted, however, as a criterion of market conditions, reduced its prices 10 points during the week. The other refiners remain unchanged, but it would not be surprising if they also made a temporary decline. It can hardly continue, however, after the summer fruit demand sets in. The present demand is only seasonable.

As the "Grocery World" goes to press it has become evident that the reduction of ½ cent per pound in the English duty on sugar is destined to have an important effect on the American sugar market. The reduction in duty means a widening in English purchases of raws, and this has already increased the demand. Refiners here have bought all the raws they could get at the lowest prices and present conditions are strong. Advances in refined may now come any time.

Syrup and Molasses.

There has been no change in glucose, and likely will be none, although the corn market is very firm and rules about 25 cents per bushel above last year. Compound syrup is in very good demand considering the season at unchanged prices. Sugar syrup is also active and unchanged. Molasses is dull at ruling prices.

Fish.

The fish market has shown a little more activity during the past week. The decline in mackerel has caused a slight increase in the demand. Some new spring Irish mackerel have arrived this week, unusually early. The quality, however, was good and they brought good prices—$16 to $17. No new shores are about as yet. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. Domestic sardines on spot are unchanged and dull. As reported elsewhere, prices on futures were withdrawn on Tuesday, due to a wrangle among the packers. The sales were very light. Imported sardines are unchanged and moderately active. Salmon on spot is unchanged and dull. No future prices have been issued up to the present time.

Canned Goods.

The tomato market, both spot and future, is unchanged in price and in fair demand. There is no indication of any immediate change. Corn, both spot and future, is dull and easy. Peas are moving very quietly at unchanged prices. The only grade which shows any firmness is New York State peas. Apples are easy and sales of New York State gallons are reported as low as $1.90. Peaches are scarce and dull. Baltimore small canned goods are unchanged and quiet. String beans are now offered as low as 55 cents f. o. b., which is a heavy decline from a few weeks ago. California canned goods are unchanged and dull, and in second hands weak.

Dried Fruits.

The prune market is advancing on the coast, but not so much so in the East. Prices here range from a 2½ to 3-cent basis, which is somewhat above the lowest prices reached during the slump. Peaches are dull and dead. Apricots are weak and dull, ruling at a lower price on spot in New York than in Philadelphia. The sales of future apricots have been light, not because the prices were too high, but because of the extremely drastic contract which the shippers are asking jobbers to accept. Currants are unchanged and in fair demand. Raisins are still very cheap, but dull. Apples are only moderately active. A price

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

As you must sell sardines, why not sell the best—the kind that will bring and hold trade for you? "Skipper" Sardines will do this.

of 15 cents has been named on new citron, this being about the price of spot goods. Some business will doubtless be done, as the price advances steadily each month. Dates and figs are unchanged and dull.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are firm and higher. Domestic pea beans are quoted at $2.40 to $2.45 in Michigan, and imported have advanced to $2.15 to $2.20. Marrows are exceedingly scarce, and anything good would command $2.25 to $2.30. California limas are unchanged and in fair demand. Split and dried peas are unchanged, being still firm, scarce and in fair demand.

Butter.

The butter market is very firm, but unchanged. The season for making butter is about two weeks behind hand, and it is therefore believed that no decline will take place for another week at least. The quality of the butter now coming in is good for the season, but will get better as the season advances. The above applies as well to Western butter as to near-by.

Eggs.

The egg market has advanced ½ cent. There is a very good consumptive and speculative demand, and if present weather exists the market will likely be very firm. Conditions will hardly change for two or three weeks, after which there will probably be warmer weather, a decrease in production and slightly higher prices.

Cheese.

Old cheese is firm and unchanged. Some new cheese are coming in right along, and their quality is not as fine as it will be, nevertheless, the market is cleaning up at 3 cents below the price of old. Throughout, the market is in a healthy condition, and the outlook is for a good make of cheese this year. The future depends on the demand.

Provisions.

The market in provisions is generally steady. All cuts of smoked meats are steady at unchanged prices. There is a fair demand reported for the whole list. Pure and compound lard is unchanged and in good demand. Barrel pork, dried beef and canned meats show some increase in consumption and unchanged prices.

Green Fruit.

Apples, Baldwins, $2 to $3.50 per barrel; Spy, $2 to $4 per barrel; Spitz, $2 to $2.50 per barrel; Russets, $2 to $3.25 per barrel, demand fair; pineapples, $2 to $3.25 per box, demand fair to good; grapefruit, $2.50 to $5.50 per box, scarce and good demand; lemons, $2 to $2.50 per box, demand slow; Florida oranges, $3 to $3.50 per box, demand fair to good; Californias, $3 to $3.75 per box, demand fair to good; bananas, firsts, $1 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1 to $1.25 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 to 90 cents per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 65 cents per bunch; reds, $1.50 to $3.50 per bunch, demand slow.

Produce.

Pennsylvania potatoes, 90 cents to $1 per bushel; York State, 90 to 95 cents per bushel, demand fair; sweet potatoes, firsts, $1.15 to $1.25 per basket; seconds, 60 to 75 cents per basket, demand fair; carrots, $2 per barrel, 50 cents per basket, demand good; Bermuda onions, $1.65 to $1.75 per bushel crate; Texas, $1.65 to $1.75 per bushel crate, demand fair; Egyptians, $3 per two-bushel bags, demand good; yellow turnips, $2 per barrel, 45 cents per basket, demand fair to good; spinach, 75 cents to $1 per barrel, demand fair; rhubarb, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches, demand good; watercress, 2 cents per bunch, demand fair; radishes, red, $2 to $2.50 per 100 bunches; white, $3 per 100 bunches, demand good; horseradish, $3 per barrel, demand fair; scullions, $1 per 100 bunches, demand good; salad, 4½ to 6 cents per bunch, demand good.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Baltimore Canned Goods.

No. 1.

Further buying of tomatoes this week, for both spot and future deliveries, was almost the only feature of interest in this market. The volume of sales were not as large as those of the week previous, but they were as much scattered and indicate a better feeling in that article. The month of May is one of the largest distributive months in the year for spot tomatoes, hence more activity in them is expected. The tomato growers and the canners made but little progress this week in getting together on a fixed price per ton for the coming crop because the growers refuse to yield and claim that they can grow other crops that are more certain to produce better results. Unless they come to some agreement shortly, the acreage to be planted in tomatoes this season will be greatly reduced as compared with that of last year. The new pack of the Spring crop of Spinach is now ready for prompt shipment, and the price is a shade lower.

There was only a small demand this week for fruits of any kind, and it is fortunate for the holders that the stocks of peaches and berries are so small. The market for canned apples continues weak, and pears are going out slowly. Vegetables were fairly active in a small jobbing way, and the articles most in demand were corn, string beans, baked beans, peas and sweet potatoes, but orders for straight carload lots were scarce.

The sales up to this date of all kinds of fruits and vegetables for future delivery are very small in comparison with previous years, and the effect of it upon the market later on is a problem which interests both the canner and jobber alike. At this time the market looks to be in buyers' favor, for the reason that all quotations on future goods are based on the most favorable outcome as to the crops and labor. A spell of cold weather with high wind and heavy rain struck this section on Thursday night and much damage is reported to have been done in the canning districts, the extent of which cannot be fully ascertained for a few days, though the newspaper reports state it to be quite large.

No. 2.

The buying of tomatoes is fair, though there is no snap or activity. We have noticed a little bit better inquiry and demand for No. 2s. There is some inquiry for future tomatoes, though practically no business being done. Offers are being made for fair size lots at 75 cents per dozen, but so far we have not been able to find any sellers at this price for good standards. We have been offered some fair standards at 75 cents per dozen, though no full standards.

The packing of pineapple will begin very shortly. In fact, a few pineapples have been packed in Baltimore this week. The season, however, will hardly begin before the middle of May.

California Fruits.

To give you our views in this report as to what the growing crops will be is but to confirm the opinion we gave you at the beginning of April and the beginning of March, viz., in our last two reports.

Apricots.—Since our last report we have had severe frosts, which have damaged, in some sections, some orchards of apricots, and evidently done some serious damage to the growing prune crop. No considerable damage, however, was done to the apricot crop, and we repeat that the present indications are that it will be the best we have had for several years.

Peaches.—We can repeat the same information that we gave you in our last two reports, the indications being for the largest crop we have had for several years.

Cherries.—On these indications are for the largest crop in years also.

Pears.—Would also repeat the information of last two reports in reference to pears.

Asparagus.—The pack of white asparagus will be shorter than anticipated at the beginning of the season. Pure white asparagus will be very difficult to obtain. Palmetto white will be in moderate supply. Green will be plentiful. Prices on the canned article will undoubtedly be much lower than last year, possibly 15 per cent. lower. We do not look for any surplus pack.

Resumé.—Although the fruit crops were not suffering very much for want of rain, we are pleased to state that we are having seasonable rains, which can only be beneficial to growing crops.

As to the prices that will rule, we have no reason to change our views as given in our previous reports.

We have suggested that fruit growers must thin their trees where they are overloaded, for unless they do this the fruit will be small, and they will have great difficulty in finding buyers for their crops, because the dried fruit business being in bad shape, and dealers having been seriously hit during the past season, the speculative feature of the business will be largely eliminated, and unless producers use every effort towards producing better fruit, they will certainly suffer very severely.

Western Canned Goods.

Doubtless you will be interested in knowing the conditions in the West as to the canned corn situation.

We are having the most backward season we have had since 1901. The weather has been exceedingly wet and cold, the ground so soaked with water that it will be impossible to do any planting until after the middle of the month. From present indications the season will be fully three weeks later than usual, with the best of weather conditions from now on.

The acreage planted to sweet corn will probably be the smallest within the past eight years, owing to the difficulty in securing contracts with farmers. Field corn has now passed the 70-cent mark in Chicago, and farmers have been able to sell their spot corn at from 60 to 65 cents per bushel. Other coarse grains are selling at equally high prices. This has given farmers very much better returns than they could possibly expect from a sweet corn acreage, and as a result the canners have not been able to make contracts. In addition to this, the seed corn is very scarce and poor in germinating quality, there being scarcely enough seed to go around even with the acreage already contracted. Canners' contracts are practically exhausted, not enough corn in the hands of canners to meet a normal consumptive demand for thirty days.

Under the circumstances the value of spot goods should be on a very different basis from what it is.

We are informed that jobbers have not placed to exceed 10 per cent. of their usual orders for future corn, although inquiries as to prices are coming in much more freely than ten days or two weeks since. Canners have made no efforts to sell futures, owing to the difficulty in securing acreage contracts from farmers, and from present appearances there will be very few contracts made in the next thirty days.

Spices.

The market is somewhat firmer, buying being more liberal for actual needs. Singapore pepper is exceedingly scarce. In fact, it is reported that there is practically none to be had except what is due to arrive during this month.

Pepper.—Penang is still cheap for import. This pepper, together with Singapore, is lower than other grades. Singapore pepper should do better, as stocks are entirely exhausted. This is the first time this has happened in many years.

Cayennes practically unchanged during the week.

Cloves.—Spot goods very scarce. Prices are unchanged during the week and it is very hard to predict the future of this article.

Pimento (Allspice) at record prices. In fact, prices have not been so low in many years. The future for this spice is safe at present value.

Mace very scarce and somewhat firmer. Demand will be better from now on.

Nutmegs are exceedingly low, especially the larger size nuts. The present is the most advantageous time to buy in large lots.

Cassias.—Saigon and China are both scarce, but are quoted lower for futures.

Gingers somewhat firmer and prices appear to be moving upward.

Seeds.—Demand very steady. Celery, Caraway and Mustard unchanged. Canary remains low; demand very good.

MARKET NOTES.

Old white potatoes have stiffened up, owing to a large percentage of the stock being held in firm hands. The price at this writing is 80 cents; it was 65. The demand is fair.

Florida tomatoes are reaching the turn of the season and have advanced to $3 for the best. Hothouse range from 20 to 25 cents and are in fair demand.

Asparagus from near-by points is still abundant. Small white ranges from 12 to 15 cents and large 20 cents, extra fancy 30 cents. The demand is good.

String beans are coming from Georgia, Charleston and Florida. From $1.75 to $2 is a fair range for the Georgia and Charleston beans,, and $1 to $1.75 for Floridas.

Cucumbers are cheap, ranging from $1.25 to $1.50 for Floridas and $1.25 per dozen for hothouse. The demand is good.

The first Florida watermelons are in market, commanding $1 each. There were only a few, and the quality was fair. The demand, however, was light.

Most of the salad on the market is from near-by points and ranges from 3½ to 5 cents. Southern salad ranges from $1.25 to $1.50 per half-barrel crate and is selling well.

AMONG THE TRADE.

There is some difference of opinion as to what future Columbia River salmon prices will be. It is expected that they will be named about June 1st. Some of the packers are in favor of an advance of 10 cents on talls and flats, but it is not considered likely that the advance will be made, owing to financial conditions.

The California Fruit Canners' Association is expected to name future prices on canned asparagus during the coming week. There is some reason to believe that they will be lower than the prices of the Central Canneries, named last week.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

Fort Fairfield, Me., April 10, 1908.
Editor Science of Advertising.

Dear Sir:—We are sending you under separate cover a copy of our local paper containing announcement of our change from credit to cash, also a couple of ads for your advertising man to criticise. The circular we mailed to all our customers immediately after the paper was issued.

We wish to acknowledge our indebtedness to those "Grocery World" subscribers who have recently sent in similar announcements to be published. We gleaned many valuable points from their papers.

We also desire to express our appreciation of the "Grocery World." We would not try to get along without it.

Yours truly,
JOS. PEARCE & SONS.

The circular in which the above firm announced to their customers the change from credit to cash was as follows:—

A PERSONAL WORD.

Dear Sir or Madam:—You will notice in this week's "Review" our announcement of a change in our business policy. Hereafter we shall do a "strictly cash business."

We have gone to a considerable length to explain our reasons in this week's "Review."

To you personally we wish to say that we very much appreciate the business you have always given us, and we trust that you may see your way to favor us with your orders in the future. We will be prepared to give them better attention than ever.

We hope that all our old customers to whom we have extended credit in the past will not criticise us too harshly now that we have to ask them for cash.

We have studied over this for several years, and have only made up our minds, after much hesitation, to take this step. We don't expect to ever regret taking it, and we don't believe that you will if you decide to go in with us.

There is no doubt but that paying cash is the simplest, easiest and most economical way for anybody to do business.

TO OUR TOWN CUSTOMERS WHO USE OUR DELIVERY TEAMS.

We will have for sale coupon books at 2, 5, 10, 15, 20 and 25 dollars each. We will allow 2 per cent. discount on these books. This discount, together with the fact that you will be buying at lowest cash prices, will, we hope, induce you to continue trading at our store. We have adopted these books for the special benefit of our delivery customers, as we know it is hard to make change at home, or always to be there when the boys bring the goods.

Our telephone ring is 17-2, and we have a private line, so that you ought to be able to reach us at almost any minute.

Yours sincerely,
JOSEPH PEARCE & SONS.

The announcement of the change contained in Pearce & Sons' local paper occupied the greater part of two columns and is reproduced below. As a matter of fact, it probably should have appeared here before the letter which referred to it:—

ANNOUNCEMENT

Our business will be put upon a STRICTLY CASH basis on the 20th DAY OF APRIL

WHY?

Because, after making a close study of the question, we believe that it will not only be to our advantage but to yours as well.

The Tendency of the Times is more and more through shorter credits to a cash basis. Cash stores are by no means a new thing, except in some districts. In the more thickly settled vicinities all the larger and more progressive stores have adopted this system.

Some Advantages to You

You don't have to help pay the bills of the man who won't or can't pay his own. Every credit merchant has to allow, in figuring his margin of profit, on a certain percentage of bad bills

You don't have to help pay for bookkeeping expenses, stamps, statements, envelopes, ledgers, etc., which are a heavy expense to every credit store.

You don't have to stand for any mistakes of clerks or bookkeepers in figuring up your bill, which are bound to happen in the best regulated establishment.

You don't have a bill coming in at the end of the month, so much larger than you expected, that you exclaim, "How on earth did that ever get so big?" When you are not paying cash you don't realize how much you buy.

You will live more economically when you are paying cash. It's easy to buy when you only have to say "Charge it."

You always know just where you stand.

Are not the above real advantages?

Some Advantages to Us

By selling for cash we can pay cash and take our discounts, which in a year would constitute a large saving.

We can improve our service, thus increasing our trade and our efficiency.

No man, unless with large capital, who has several thousand dollars on his books all the time, can give the necessary attention to either his customers or his clerks; a large amount of his time must be given to looking over and collecting accounts. This practically saves expenses of one man, as it leaves the proprietor free for other duties.

We can give lower prices, because we can turn our money over often, and save bookkeeping expenses, bad bills, etc. This is a great advantage, especially to a market-man. Here in Aroostook the markets each year have to depend more and more upon western beef and pork. For this we have to pay every seven days, there are no exceptions to this rule. Now we'll leave it to you, if it wouldn't cut to pay cash for goods and trust them out for from one to three months and sometimes, unavoidably, for longer times.

IT'S UP TO YOU to decide these things. We just ask you to read what we have written here and then figure it out yourself

Just notice that under advantages to us, we have lower prices and better service. We count it an advantage to us to be able to give these, but they are also real advantages to you.

And wouldn't it pay you, if you happen to be a little short of money, to have a little rather than to run bills? Wouldn't you feel better to owe all in one bunch and know just what it was? In buying for cash it wouldn't take long to save the interest and more.

THANK YOU

We wish to give our heartiest thanks to the many friends and customers who have patronized us in the past.

We appreciate the large business you have given us, but we know that we would not have had it if we hadn't deserved it—if we hadn't come pretty near suiting with prices, quality and service.

Under the cash system we shall do even better, so we hope that your patronage will continue just as long as we deserve it.

Jos. Pearce & Sons.

This is a good advertisement. It might have been cut down a little in verbiage and size, but all in all it is just about what it ought to be. It is a delicate matter to tell a customer who has previously been considered worthy of credit that from now on you will expect her to pay cash. The fact that you are not singling her out alone, but are treating all customers alike, helps some, but nevertheless it is still a matter to be handled with gloves. I think this advertisement goes at it admirably in treating it as a business proposition pure and simple. If the consumer can be made to realize that it will actually pay her in several ways, to pay cash, she will do it and the revolution will be bloodlessly won. So that it seems obvious that the way to get at the thing is not sentimentally, but from the standpoint of the pocket-book, just as Pearce & Sons have done it. I think, however, that instead of sending a letter which referred to the main announcement which may not have been seen, I should have had the advertisement reproduced as a circular, the greater part of it, at least, and sent that. Then everybody would have seen it.

Pearce & Sons are doing good advertising, in regular directions. They send me a couple of their regular advertisements, the best of which I reproduce below. One of the two is double and the other single column. The former I don't think much of, but the single-column advertisement is good. Here it is photographically reproduced:—

Table Delicacies

This Week

CELERY - 20c. per bunch

Arrives Friday afternoon by express, so it's sure to be nice and crisp for your Sunday dinner.

Kippered Herring 5c. each

These delicious lightly smoked and slightly oiled fish have evidently suited the majority who have tried them, as we are having a steady sale for them. They make a nice supper with baked or creamed potatoes.

Scallops 50c. per quart

We don't have these very often, and there is not much known about them up here, but they are considered a great delicacy in the cities. They are the cleanest, whitest-looking article in the fish line. Make nice eating stewed or fried in crumbs.

Oysters in Shell, $1 per pk

BLUE POINTS, these are. We could get cheaper ones, but thought it best to get the best, as we don't have them very often.

Wouldn't a few on the half-shell taste pretty good to you?

Finnan Haddie 15c. per lb.
Clams (shelled) 30c. per qt.
Clams (in shell) 40c. per pk.

There is not much demand for the goods here, but we like to be in style occasionally. If there is any article in the above list of which you are fond, buy some, and help us clean up, that we may try it again another day.

Pearce's
ESTABLISHED 1870

I regard this as an extremely good advertisement. The only criticism I would make of it is that it is worth a better head. "Table Delicacies" is a little tame. "Good Things for Your Table" is a little longer, but better, I think.

The Hotel Patrons' Demand

A coffee that satisfies on a hotel table is a good coffee and will stand up under any test you can give it.

That's because hotel patrons are supercritical. They expect more than they get at home; in fact they expect perfection.

Hotel Astor Coffee is the year-in-and-year-out brand of some of the most exclusive hotels in New York City. They never think of buying anything else — they wouldn't dream of it.

The success of this coffee under this exacting test is really the reason that led us to push it through the grocery trade. We have a plan to increase your high-grade coffee trade. May we tell you about it? A postal request is enough.

Southern Grocer Kicks Over Fruit Trade

Says He Can't Get a Barrel of Apples That Runs Uniformly Good. Answers Recent Criticisms by Jobbers That Retailers Get Too Much for Apples. Lemon and Orange Conditions Also Unsatisfactory.

I saw an article in a Northern fruit paper accusing us retailers of trying to get too big a price for apples. We think the jobbers responsible for the slow movement of apples. Down here we pay $5.50 for a very inferior apple. Freight is 50 cents, which makes it cost us $6. By the time we throw away the spoiled ones, which always run from 10 to 15 per cent., it leaves our profit about $1 per barrel. We can't afford to work that cheap. I see apples quoted $2.50 to $3.50. Freight to the jobbers can't be over 50 cents per barrel. This gives the jobber a profit of $2 to $2.50 a barrel. The man who opens them and hands them out by the 5, 10, 15 and 20 cents' worth gets less than half what the jobber who sells them in one to ten-barrel lots at the time. There is where the trouble lies, I think.

Another thing, we get a barrel of apples and open them. The top is fine. The second layer is worse and it continues so until the middle of the barrel is reached and they are so bad that you can't get any kind of a price for them. I have been selling apples for twenty years and I have my first barrel to open yet that was good throughout. It is getting worse with apples, oranges and lemons. We once could order 96s in oranges and get fine oranges. Now you get just the ordinary size. The difference is only in the number. You order all extra fancy apples or lemons. All the difference is in the price. You are charged 50 or 75 cents and possibly $1 more for putting extra fancy on your order. The grocery man gets disgusted and quits ordering, and when he drops out it is left entirely to the Italian fruit dealer, and he gets his 35 cents or $1 per dozen for his fruit, and therefore the people quit eating fruit. The packer and distributer are the men who are killing the business.

I am in a truck-growing town and I find that the grocer will pay 25 cents more for select goods packed throughout than he will for false packing, and the men here who pack good goods get good prices and have no trouble in getting rid of their goods. I suggest to the gentlemen to give us goods that we order and at prices that we can live at, and you will see how the apples will move. We can always sell good stock, and bad stock is a stayer. I bought an extra fancy apple for my Christmas trade and out of the eight barrels I bought I could not get a dozen good apples. Of course I will never buy anything from that firm again, but the question arises in my mind: "Can I do any better?" If you would sound the grocery trade throughout the South you will find nine-tenths of the grocerymen just like me. I would like to hear from some of them through your columns.

BOOK REVIEWS

Receipts for the Preserving of Fruit, Vegetables and Meat. By E. Wagner, Technical Manager of the Preserving and Marmalade Departments of the Trachenberg Sugar Boiling Works, Germany. Published in the United States by D. Van Nostrand Co., 23 Murray street, New York. Price $2.50.

This is a small book of 115 pages, with four illustrations, describing with great fullness the modern method of preserving fruits, vegetables and meats, without the use of chemical preservatives. The book goes into more minute details regarding manufacturing processes than any previous work of its class, and will probably be of great value to manufacturers in the lines represented.

Do you realize what 70 per cent. profit means? If you could make that on all the goods you sell you could soon retire with a competency. By selling Goff's Cough Syrup, a standard remedy that has been on the market for many years, you can make at least 70 per cent. Better write to S. B. Goff & Sons Co., Camden, N. J., and let them tell you how.

Useful Facts About Groceries

The department which will henceforth be conducted under the above head is best explained by the letter which appears below, and which was recently sent to the "Grocery World." In the hope that a little such matter may be of interest and value to "Grocery World" readers, a short educational article along the lines indicated will appear under this head from time to time.

Vermontville, N. Y.

Editor "Grocery World."

Dear Sir:—I have long wanted a book which would be a sort of encyclopædia, one that would take a certain article, describe it, tell where it grew, how it was prepared for market, what season of the year it was marketed, how it should be stored, whether in a cold or warm place.

Such a book was published once, but as near as I can find out it is out of print now.

I was thinking if the "Grocery World" could devote, say, half a column a week to a work of this kind we would have, in a little while, the long-looked-for work.

But I won't ask for too much, for we are getting good things all the time.

Very truly yours, N. H. BRECKENRIDGE.

Stilton Cheese.

This rich, white and solid cheese has long been esteemed by many of our native gourmets and epicures as the finest and richest cheese made in England.

It is never made at Stilton, although this Huntingdonshire village gave it its name. Years ago, when coaches used to pass through Stilton, many travelers put up at the inn, where remarkably good cheese was served to them. Its renown grew, and hence the fame of Stilton cheese; but it was at that time really made in Leicestershire by the landlord's sister, who held the original recipe. It is now made in several of the adjoining counties, and Melton Mowbray is the market centre.

It is made of new milk and cream, the cream of one day being added to the entire milk of the following day. They are made of all sizes, but in form are generally twice as high as they are abroad, and on analysis, when fresh, show about 32 per cent. of water, 24 of casein, 37 of fat, 2¼ of milk-sugar, and about 4 per cent. of ash. When mature, they are nearly like Gorgonzola and Brie cheese, but are not considered sufficiently ripe and mellow for cutting until two years old at least, and not perfect unless decayed, blue marked and moist.

Sultana or Smyrna Raisins.

These small light-colored raisins derive the name of Sultanas from the specie of grape used. They chiefly come from Turkey, and are nearly all shipped at Smyrna; the inland districts of Nymphio and Magnesia producing half the whole crop, but of late years some very fine Sultanas have been produced in Greece. Considerable quantities are also grown around Tchesmé. Sultanas comprise many varieties, distinguished by the names of the places of their respective growths, such as Carabournou, Vourla, Tchesmé, Phocé, Yerli, etc. The first named are considered to be the best.

Sultanas are usually of a pale golden yellow color, with thin and delicate skins, and are very sweet, but without much flavor. They are usually cured in boiling oil. Their chief characteristic is the absence of stones, seeds or kernels, thus saving time in cooking, but they are also popular as a table fruit and for confectionery.

Tablet Tea.

Tablet tea has become a very popular form of tea in Russia and Siberia. It is of much superior quality to brick tea and tile tea.

Tablet tea is nearly all packed at Kiukiang, in Canton, by Russian firms.

It is made from the finest tea dust procurable, the selection of which is the work of skilled experts. The price paid at the factories for the dust varies from 10d. per pound upwards, while that used for brick tea costs only about 2½d., and for tile tea about 1½d. per pound.

It is manufactured by steam machinery, but the tea is not moistened or softened by steam, as with the other compressed teas. Dry tea dust is poured into a steam mold on a steel cylinder, and the pressure brought to bear is about two tons per tablet, which renders it perfectly hard and solid, and something like a block of chocolate in appearance, particularly as the tablets are also marked or divided into similar small portions. Each tablet of tea weighs about 110 grams, of about 15½ grains to the gram.

Great care is required in the manufacture and packing, and the cost is comparatively high. The tablets are wrapped first in tin-foil, then in expensive and attractive paper wrappers, and finally packed in tin-lined cases for export to Russia.

The tea, it is stated, loses none of its flavor by being pressed into tablets, and as tablet tea is only one-sixth of the bulk of leaf tea, it is most convenient for travelers, backwoodsmen, or armies in the field, or for transporting into the remoter regions of Russia.

Glucose-Baking Powder War Off.

Invitations to Witness the Mutual Carnage Recalled. Differences Adjusted Between Corn Products Co. and Royal Baking Powder Trust. Trade has been Hopefully Expecting Juicy Prices.

Advices were received from an inside source during the week that the threatened competition between the Corn Products Refining Co., makers of glucose, and the Royal Baking Powder Trust, makers of baking powder, was off. It was stated that the differences between the two concerns "had been adjusted" and each would remain in its own field.

The trade of the whole country have been looking for fur to fly between these two companies concerned. The Royal Baking Powder Co. loads its powders with starch, and for years has been a very heavy customer of the Corn Products Co., the largest producer of starch in the country. Several months ago a controversy arose between the two and relations became strained. The Royal Baking Powder Trust announced that it had bought a Western glucose company and would very soon have glucose and syrup on the market in competition with the Corn Products Co. The latter announced that it had long looked with favor upon the baking powder business and expected shortly to engage in it.

Naturally the entrance of each into the field in which the other now has a practical monopoly would have meant war and loss, and the realization of this fact unquestionably led to the making of peace.

Kentucky State Convention Great Success.

Twenty Towns Represented. Street Parade Through Wholesale District had Over Two Hundred in Line. Food Show in Progress.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Paris, Ky., May 6, 1908.

The first convention of the Kentucky retail grocers was held in Paris, Ky., on the 28th and 29th of April and was successful beyond expectations.

The delegations from Newport, Covington and Cynthiana were met at the depot and escorted to headquarters in the Elks' Temple. One hundred men were in line, preceded by band. The meetings were held in the court house, beginning on Tuesday at 2 P. M. Addresses of welcome and responses took part of the afternoon and discussion of the new constitution the balance. At the evening session Mr. J. C. Hunt, wholesale grocer of Louisville, and John I. Logan, representing the millers of Bourbon County, each delivered an address, which was enthusiastically received by an audience that entirely filled the hall.

On Wednesday morning the new constitution was adopted and the National Secretary, John A. Green, addressed the convention at length. At 2 P. M. the delegates and local grocers assembled and formed a procession and visited the wholesale houses and milling plants. There were over 200 men in line and all delivery wagons were decorated and followed up the rear. The procession was again headed by band, and the stores and public buildings were liberally decorated.

A food show was in progress and was visited by the entire delegation. At 8 P. M. a banquet in Elks' Hall was attended by all the delegates and business men of the city of Paris.

The officers of the Kentucky Retail Grocers' Association are H. W. Horner, of Newport; treasurer, Chas. B. Cook, of Paris. Mr. Cook is entirely responsible for the success of the State convention. He was elected delegate to Boston, with expenses paid. The next meeting will be held at Frankfort (capital) on the 2d and 3d Tuesday and Wednesday of May, 1909. There were twenty

Look Hard at This Scheme

What is the Game of the "Business Men's Association of Pennsylvania"? Supposed to be Aiming to Repeal the Mercantile Tax Law, and to that End is Raking the State for Money. Collects Hundreds of Dollars from Various Retailers. Dauphin County Court Suspects Motives. The Scheme Examined.

Some attention is being attracted to the scheme of an organization calling itself "The Business Men's Association of Pennsylvania," whose headquarters are in Philadelphia and whose one avowed object is to secure the repeal of the Pennsylvania mercantile tax law at the next legislative session. The association has been collecting large sums of money from retailers of all classes throughout the State, and there is some reason to look upon it askance.

The officers of the organization are as follows: President, Alexis J. Limeburner, 2024 North 22d street; vice-president, Charles W. Dickenskid, 5211 Baltimore avenue; secretary, Thomas C. Thompson, 16th and Federal streets; treasurer, Robert Haight, 1524 Chestnut street. These officers are curiously selected for an organization supposed to represent the retail trade. Limeburner is given no occupation by the Philadelphia directory; Dickenskid is a doctor, Thompson a grocer, and Haight a newspaper man. Only one man on the list, therefore, is a merchant.

One day last week the promoters went into the Dauphin County Common Pleas Court, which is located at Harrisburg, the State Capital, and applied for a charter. The court inquired what the corporate intentions were and when told that it was to work in the State Legislature to repeal the mercantile tax law, remarked that that looked like lobbying and held the matter under advisement. This very probably means a refusal to grant a charter. Some of the officers of the concern are quoted as having stated that if the Dauphin County Court refused a charter, they would go into the Philadelphia County courts, but in all probability that would do them no good if the charter had been refused by the court of another county.

This is exceedingly important to the retailers who might become members of the association. If it becomes incorporated no member is responsible for its debts. If it remains unincorporated, every member is in a sense like the member of a partnership: he can be joined in a suit against the association.

The mercantile tax law is exceedingly unpopular among the retail trade of the State for various reasons, and the object of the "Business Men's Association of Pennsylvania" will probably find ready response in the breast of every retail merchant. It is of course important to know whether this particular organization is fit to be trusted with the management of the campaign. The Retail Merchants' Association of Pennsylvania, a bona fide organization of several years' standing with local affiliations all over the State, would seem to be sufficient in this field. This association made a hard fight to have the tax law repealed at the last legislative session, but failed. If an organization like that, actually representing to the fullest extent the retail trade of Pennsylvania, could not succeed, it seems quite unlikely that a professional promoting organization such as this could get anywhere at all.

The avidity with which the "Business Men's Association of Pennsylvania" is scouring the retail trade of the State for money has made a good many people think that that may be its real object. This is the way the scheme is looked upon by the local papers of the towns where the association's agents have been.

The following is from the Bellefonte (Pa.) "Watchman." The solicitors there, according to this paper, were Limeburner, the president, and Dickenskid, vice-president:—

Wednesday morning the two men were up bright and early and started in to work the town. They are wise in their business, for the first firm visited was one of the most prominent in Bellefonte.

After the merchant had signed the petition and been politely thanked for his willingness to help along the good cause, he was very politely told that, of course, there was considerable expense entailed in making the canvass and in getting the matter in shape to present to the Legislature, and for this purpose a fund was being raised by the voluntary contributions of the merchants who had signed the petition. Of course, they stated, it was not obligatory on any one contributing anything if they did not see fit to do so, and this plausible argument had the desired effect and the merchant most always paid.

The two men worked Bellefonte Wednesday morning, managing to see most every merchant in town, and not only got their signatures, but contributions from each in sums ranging from $2 to $5. They left that same day on one of the noon trains, and then the merchants began to get awake. The more they thought about it the more they were convinced that they had been stung good and proper, and that there was nothing bona fide in the proposition. They made inquiries for the two gentlemen, but found they had left the town quite suddenly, and then they sought their attorneys and the sheriff. But neither of the latter could understand where the merchants had any chance to recover, and consequently they are wondering just what they were up against.

It is variously stated that the men collected anywhere from $200 to $300 for their morning's work in Bellefonte, though the amount is hardly that large. Whether genuine or a swindle, their scheme is a slick one for parting the merchant from his dollars. One fact that makes it look a little suspicious is that the same night the two men were in Bellefonte another gentlemen from Philadelphia was here, and he at the time told some things that were not exactly bubbling with overconfidence in the scheme. But whether a genuine or a swindle, the Bellefonte merchants feel that they were taken in good and proper.

The Lock Haven (Pa.) "Democrat" says the men cleaned up $300 there in sums ranging from $2 to $5.

Under all the facts the retail merchants of Pennsylvania are warned to look very closely at this enterprise before giving up any money to it.

Question: Charles T. Mayer, Philadelphia, Pa.—We have had plans drawn for a house by contractor, and the house was not to cost over $7,000, and when he made the plans and specifications we were to pay him $50. But when the plans came the price of the house was $11,000 instead of $7,000. We would like to know if we have to pay this $50, as the plans were to call for a $7,000 house. The house was too high a price and we did not use the plans.

Answer.—If your arrangement with the contractor was to pay him $50 for a set of plans for a $7,000 house, the contractor has not fulfilled his agreement by supplying plans for an $11,000 house, and he cannot collect his fee if you did not accept or use the plans.

It now looks like a short potato crop in Florida. The price has been $3.75 per barrel, but it is expected to advance to $4.25 by the time this paper is published. Last year the market dropped to $3.50, and suddenly advanced to $6. If it reaches $4.25 this year it may go higher. The demand is about equal to the supply.

Ought a Manufacturer to Fix Your Prices?

I see by the programme of the National Convention of Retail Grocers that they're going to discuss whether a manufacturer ought to fix the price that a retail grocer should sell his goods for.

They've sure hit on a live subject, all right.

The rolled oats people have made it live, particularly lately. The Mother's Oats people are sweating hard to get the retailer to charge 12 cents for Mother's oats. A whole lot of grocers haven't been in the habit of getting anywhere near that.

The Quaker oats people say they want the retailer to get a good profit on Quaker oats, too but 12 cents is an odd sort of price—10 cents is a heap better. So they put down the wholesale price of their oats so that the grocer, they say, can sell at 10 cents and make something for himself.

The point is—ought a manufacturer to butt in at all?

I think it depends on the price the manufacturer wants to make. There have been manufacturers who wanted as big a sale of their goods as they could get, and who in order to get it tried to fix the retail price too low.

That's a low trick and when a grocer has it played on him he should hit back hard.

But when the retail price that the manufacturer tries to make is a better price than the retailer has been able to get by himself, it seems to me like rank foolishness to kick. Let him go ahead and do it—what do you lose?

I have a friend who sells cameras. Up to five or six years ago these Kodak cameras were hawked about for any old price. The cheap department stores put 'em in and pushed 'em out at $3.98 and so on, and the first thing the dealers knew the camera business was flat on the bum.

No money in it for anybody.

They were beginning to get sore, when the manufacturer butted in and fixed a scale of retail prices. He cut a lot of the price-cutters off and only took 'em back when they signed a contract to sell at the prices he'd fixed. In fact my friend tells me that nobody can handle Kodak cameras to-day unless he signs an iron-clad agreement to do as the manufacturer says.

Particularly as to prices.

The result of that was that the consumer got stung, but the dealer found himself back in juicier clover fields than he'd ever been in before. The price of Kodak cameras went up right away, that is, the retail price did, and it's still up. I'll bet there are five hundred stores in Philadelphia selling Kodak cameras to-day, every mother's son of 'em at the same price.

You can go anywhere you like—to the department stores, to the biggest photographic house in the city, or to the little drug store way out in the suburbs, you'll pay one price for Kodak cameras.

And it's the same all over the United States.

What's the result? Why, the camera dealers think there's nobody on earth like the manufacturer of Kodak cameras. You can blow at 'em all you like about monopoly, and trust laws and competition, and they'll smile like a chessy cat and tell you to talk about something interesting.

Do any of those fellows argue that the manufacturer ought to mind his own business and let retail prices alone? Not on your life! They realize what is the truth—that by fixing the retail price the manufacturer of Kodaks has made them sure of a profit that they never in the world could have got themselves. At least they never did get it.

There have been a few smart alecks who kicked over the traces and cut the price after they'd agreed not to, but they only did it once. My friend tells me that some of these have never been taken back to this day. The others got back, but it cost 'em a pretty penny to do it.

So that no matter whether it's strictly right for the manufacturer to mix in with the retail price or not, the retail grocer ought to be tickled to death to have him mix in, if——

The price he fixes is a good price.

Why, a whole lot of manufacturers in other lines than foods fix the retail price, and I never heard of retailers kicking.

That is, not good retailers. You know there is a class of dealers who can only sell goods by cutting prices below competitors. Cutting's all they know. Those men are not merchants—anybody can sell a staple article if he's below everybody else.

The fellow who only knows cut prices don't like manufacturers who force him not to cut prices, because that robs him of the only business method he knows.

I have a cousin in the jewelry business. He told me the other day that the makers of the Howard watch make jewelers do the same thing. Every watch that goes out of the factory has a tag around its neck with the retail price printed on. The retailer is expected to sell at that price, and if he don't, they have a way of finding it out pretty quick.

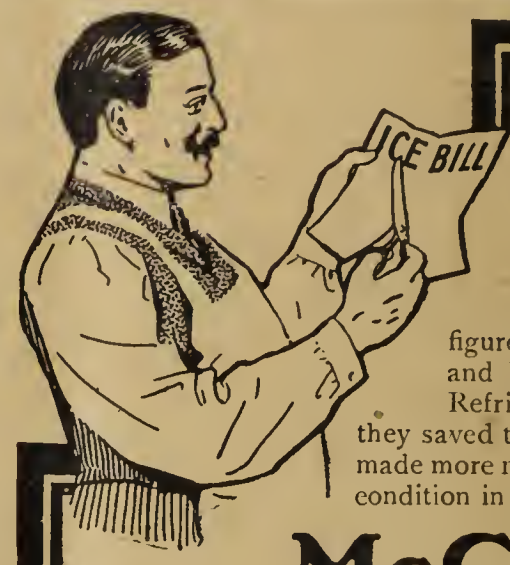
Then no more Howard watches for him.

There's a funny thing about this profit business—I think the average retail merchant is the least greedy man on earth.

I know a lot of members of the Philadelphia Retail Grocers' Association. When they started in to buy from the association they found they could get goods they'd been paying the jobber $1 a dozen for, say, at 85 cents. That meant a saving of 15 cents a dozen, didn't it?

Wouldn't you have thought they would have simply put that in their pockets as an extra profit, and kept their selling price the same?

Would you believe that a whole lot of 'em, philanthropists as they were, straight-away gave it to their customers by cutting their own price?



That's exactly what happened—they've told me so.

Maybe that feeling that a retailer is cheeky when he takes a good profit has something to do with the feeling some retailers have that the manufacturer oughtn't to fix the retail price.

Plunger Sully Fails Again.

The Buchan's Soaps Corporation has gone to pot. Two petitions in bankruptcy were filed against it on Monday last in New York and the concern will undoubtedly be adjudicated a bankrupt. The concern sold soap generally throughout the country. The president of the corporation is Daniel J. Sully, formerly a cotton broker, whose failure in March, 1904, with liabilities of $4,600,000, caused a sensation at that time, and who subsequently received a discharge from bankruptcy. Before he became a cotton broker Mr. Sully was secretary of the old Carbolic Soap Co. He is a son-in-law of the late David M. Thompson, who was president of that company. The Carbolic Soap Co. was incorporated in 1880, succeeding the Buchan Carbolic Soap Co., and the former company carried on the business until August, 1906, when it was succeeded by the Buchan Toilet Soap Co., with capital stock $100,000, and on October 1, 1906, the Buchan's Soaps Corporation succeeded to the business. It was capitalized at $1,200,000, of which $1,000,000 is common stock and $200,000 preferred. On the death of David M. Thompson a few years ago Mr. Sully became president. The assets are $25,000 and the liabilities $85,000. A receiver was appointed with authority to continue the business.

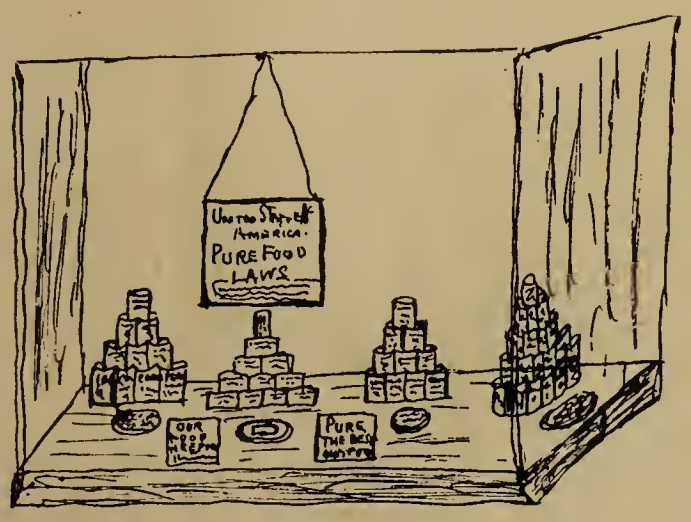
DEAR SIR.—Enclosed you will find my check to pay balance due on the beef cutter I purchased of you through your agent, Mr. T. M. Hoffman. He told me if I desired to pay for the machine by the time the first payment was due I might have it at the cash price.

I have so decided—so if you will be kind enough to send me the release you will oblige me.

Yours truly,

COOK HOWLAND, JR.



N. B.—I wish to say that the machine is a grand success, and I believe will pay for itself in two months as we have increased our trade to six times the amount of beef.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Pure Food Display.

A unique and very attractive food display can be made by following these suggestions: Cover the bottom of the window with clean, white-glazed paper and in the centre of the window pile some butter (pound butter done up in the oiled tissue paper) in the form of a pyramid. In front of the butter, or whatever is preferred to be displayed, have one pound of the butter displayed openly on a plate or platter. On each side of the pyramid of butter build another pyramid of canned goods and in front of these have plates containing the corn, peas, etc., displayed openly similar to the butter. The amount of the variety of foods depend upon the size of the window, but five displays of different foods are sufficient. Have a sign hanging above the butter with a copy of the pure food laws (a circular with the pure food laws in large type can be obtained from the Pure Food Department upon request). Also place two small signs in front of the other goods, as in the illustration. Any wording on the order of "Our foods are pure and guaranteed by the United States Government," or "Our foods are pure and positively free from all adulterations," etc., can be written on the cards according to the displayer's preference. The food displayed openly in the plates can be covered with bell jars if there are many flies in the window, but one great rule of such display is: Have the window clean and free from all dust and flies. This window display is unique and very enticing, and there is no expense whatever connected with it.

A Health Food Display.

For a window display showing a line of health foods and quickly prepared cereals, arrange a line of cartons in the form of a semi-circle and build up a pyramid of cartons in the centre. Hang a large sign over the display calling attention to the nutritive value of health cereals and refer to their value as to the building up of the health. If preferred, samples of the various foods can be displayed openly upon platters or plates, calling attention to the absolute purity of the articles with small signs. The front line of the cartons containing the foods can be opened, showing the contents.

J. J. Lauderman, proprietor of the Dundee Creamery Co., of Allegheny, and N. E. Burns, alias J. W. Foster, on Thursday last pleaded guilty at Pottsville to 13 indictments charging them with selling oleomargarine. Fines of $100 in each case, or $1,300 in all, were imposed on them, with a warning by Judge Marr that if caught again in this business in Schuylkill County they would be sent to jail. As soon as the costs were paid in this case United States Deputy Marshall Peter D. Helms arrested Lauderman and Burns for violating the Internal Revenue law by selling oleo without the required revenue tax. They were held under $1,000 bail each.

Swift & Company

Chicago, Ill.

At the last meeting of the Chicago (Ill.) Retail Grocers' Association the following resolutions were adopted in regard to the cereal price controversy:—

Whereas, It has been brought to the attention of the Chicago Grocers' and Butchers' Association that a certain cereal company is contemplating the renewal of the practice of printing the retail selling price on their packages, and

Whereas, In so doing they are leaving but a very small margin of profit for the retail grocer on the sale of such product, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Chicago Grocers' and Butchers' Association hereby places its members on record as condemning the action of any manufacturer who attempts to place the retail prices of their product or advertise the retail prices in any of same to be distributed to the consumer, and be it further

Resolved, That we demand that the retail selling prices of all manufacturers' products be left to the discretion of the retailer in distributing same to the consumer.

CHICAGO GROCERS' AND BUTCHERS' ASSOCIATION.
H. F. Petersen, Secretary.
F. J. Frank, President.

New York Wholesale Grocers' Association.

The secretary of the New York Wholesale Grocers' Association has issued the following letter to the members regarding the cereal price controversy:—

New York, May 1, 1908.

To Members:—

One of the most deliberate attempts to force the wholesale as well as retail grocer to distribute a proprietary article without proper or even a reasonable compensation is that of a well known cereal company.

Reducing the jobbers' profit below the cost of distribution and practically making it prohibitive for the retailer to dispose of the article, except to his disadvantage, would seem a most arbitrary position for any manufacturer to assume, especially in face of the fact that the company in question is distributing its product through other than legitimate channels, to the detriment of the wholesale and retail grocer.

It is stated by the cereal company that there is no occasion for the above condition, from a market standpoint or other causes, but that it is inaugurated solely to increase the consumption of the proprietary article.

If such increased consumption is to be obtained entirely in the interest of the cereal company, at the expense of the wholesale and retail grocer, it would seem that the best interests of the wholesale and retail trade would be subserved by conservative merchandising, rather than increased volume of business, without proper compensation or a recognition of legitimate distribution.

Yours very truly,
ALFRED H. BECKMANN,
Secretary.

Indianapolis, Ind.

The Indianapolis (Ind.) Retail Grocers' Association has decided to stand in with the 12-cent retail price advocated by the Great Western Cereal Co. and have sent the company the following letter:—

Indianapolis, Ind., April 30, 1908.

The Great Western Cereal Co.,
Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Retail Grocers' Association of Indianapolis, held Tuesday evening, April 28, 1908, the price of standard size package oats, both wholesale and retail, was discussed at length. The consensus of opinion was that a minimum selling of 12 cents should be maintained regardless of the recent decline in prices at wholesale, as there is no certainty that present prices will continue.

There can be no doubt that the efforts of the Association throughout the country, with your co-operation, to establish a selling price of 12 cents per package have resulted in a decrease in the consumption of your opponent's goods. Nor can there be any doubt that this decreased consumption, thus caused, has been the determining factor in forcing that company to reduce prices in an effort to bring their sales back to normal.

The Board extends to your company its appreciation of your efforts to afford the retailer a legitimate profit from his business.

Yours truly,
RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

Pessimistic View of the Tomato Market.

Well-known Canned Goods House Sends "Grocery World" Gloomy Statement Regarding both Spot and Future Goods. Both Below Cost, They Say.

Messrs. Strasbaugh, Silver & Co., the well-known canned goods packers and brokers, have sent the "Grocery World" an exceedingly pessimistic statement concerning the present and future prospects of the tomato market. They claim that both spot and future goods are selling below actual cost.

A portion of their statement follows:—

72½, 75 and 77½ cents (all standard) and are showing a loss to the seller, with seconds as low as 65 cents and yet the buyer is not happy for he wants and expects at the lowest price the best quality in bright tins, properly wintered, free from rust and leaks, even though it costs the seller more to keep them thus and his loss is greater for attempting to act in a business-like manner and give the best article in the best condition, at the best price. Of course, with such sentiment existing, there are many disappointments, more especially when goods come forward, are examined and it is learned that the seller had a method in his madness when he accepted a concession for he did not mean, at any time, to give his best at the lowest price, knowing well that value and worth are sure to have their reward, for things are not intended to be topsy turvy all the time, if perchance, semi-ocasionally.

"Futures! futures! what crimes are committed in thy name!" Most packers figure that it will cost 75 cents to pack 3s full standard tomatoes during the season of 1908, and yet some packers are offering 1908 packing standard 3s tomatoes at 75 cents, f. o. b. factory. What will the harvest be, what the delivery? If one has an article and must dispose of it, a loss sometimes is the best under the circumstances, but to sell something he has not, may not have and it is questionable how many, at a cost or without a profit is indeed passing strange and yet with all this, many buyers do not realize the opportunity thus being offered them, for it is even thought that cans, cases and material cost nothing, labor does not have to be paid and moreover it is a fact that ofttimes these bills are left unpaid and frequently the buyer does not get his delivery according to contract.

The demand for future tomatoes is somewhat improved and buyers who have awaited further conditions so long are beginning to realize that it is well to get in out of the wet, at least as far as a proportion of their likely orders is concerned. The American consumer must eat the coming year and those who expect to continue in business make it their business to supply the necessities and luxuries of life must make some early arrangements and cannot afford to await the packing season when physical impossibility would confront them and deter them from obtaining their requirements in the usual business-like manner, and as a result many buyers appreciate the uncertainty of such tactics and are inclined to continue to place their orders another season and to best advantage before the most careful and relibale packers are booked up and in a position wherein they would have to refuse further business.

Florida eggplants, for anything good, bring $2 to $2.75 per crate. The demand is good.

Probable Results of Mocha Coffee Ruling

Much Long Berry Abyssinian Coffee has been Sold in this Country as Mocha. Usually Sells Slightly Under Short Berry Arabian Coffee. Used Only in Blends.

The new Federal ruling on Mocha coffee, published last week, will have some effect, but not much, upon the domestic trade in Mocha coffee. The ruling, in a nutshell, is that only coffee that actually comes from Yemen (usually a short berry coffee) can be sold as Mocha. Coffee coming from Abyssinia (usually a long berry) must not be sold as Mocha, though it is undeniable that it has been sold as Mocha in this country for years.

It can be said that the coffee now denominated Abyssinia, and the real Arabian coffee derived from Yemen, has always been indiscriminately sold as Mocha in the American trade. The long berry Abyssinian coffee has usually sold at about ½ cent below the short berry real Arabian coffee, though at times it has brought the same price and once in a great while ½ cent more. Opinions differ as to whether it drinks as well or not. It is more astringent in its nature than genuine Mocha coffee, and for that reason will give the same result in a blend with ¼ less.

Already some of the largest coffee importers in the United States have announced that their long berry coffee would henceforth be billed as Abyssinian coffee. They admit selling it as Mocha up to the date of the ruling.

It is believed that the principal effect of the decision will be to increase the demand for short berry Mocha coffee. In most cases Mocha is used only in blends; only very seldom is it drunk straight. In "Mocha and Java" blends, where the Mocha is really Abyssinian, the packer will either have to buy short berry Mocha to put in his blend, or he will have to use some other description than "Mocha and Java." That is, he will if he believes the ruling is capable of enforcement. So far as the "Grocery World" can learn, practically no attempt has ever been made on the part of the trade to obey the recent Java coffee ruling, which ordered that only coffee coming from Java island be sold as Java. Neither has any effort been made to enforce it.

If enough people transfer their demand to short berry coffee, it is not at all unlikely that the market may be affected.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XXXVII.—Advertising Is Not Charity But Investment.

Your advertising appropriation is not a charity fund.

If you will just get over the idea that your advertising appropriation is a fund set aside to give away, and awake to the fact that it is the fund with which you must build up "good will," which is considered by many people, when buying a business, to be of even greater value than the stock on hand, you will begin to give the spending of that appropriation the proper amount of attention.

It is the desire of every retailer and every wholesaler to build up a regular patronage, get a regular following, which can be depended upon year in and year out, and every name added to this list is one more addition to the value of the "good will" of the business.

Good advertising is not the scattering of the advertising appropriation upon the waters. It is the spending of that appropriation, be it great or small, to the best possible advantage, always bearing in mind the two main objects, to get new customers and to hold them. Do not neglect advertising to reach regular customers, for they are what gives value to "good will" of the business, and no man in business can afford to neglect building up this "good will" value, for the business which has no valuable "good will" is not worth buying, and is generally sold through the bankruptcy court.

The meat department is rented to another dealer on profitable terms, which make advertiser's rent very low. Owner has other business which takes his time. Price inventory.

No. 333.—General store in Mifflin County, Pa. An extremely strong proposition. Size 30x100 feet. Business about $4,000 per month, 40 per cent. cash. Stock $6,000, which can be reduced considerably. Uses two teams. Business thoroughly profitable, netting about $5,000 per year. Owner in poor health and wants to retire to country place. Will make very favorable terms. Low price for fixtures. Stock at inventory, with proper allowance for everything not strictly up to the mark. The business can be very decidedly increased.

No. 336.—On best business street of West Philadelphia. Store 16x27 feet. Does $150 to $200 weekly, all cash. Stock about $700. No team delivery. Clears 20 per cent. as expenses are low. Good dwelling connected for sale or rent. Good reasons which will be fully explained. Price inventory.

No. 341.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and delicatessen. Size 20x30 feet. Does $300 weekly. All cash. Stock $2,000, but can be reduced to $1,300. Push cart delivery. Net profits, 15 per cent., as family run store. Established 12 years. Owner must sell as death compels him to assume another business. Price inventory. Fixtures will run about $1,500, but can be reduced to $1,100. Amount required, around $3,000. Cash or good security. Dwelling.

No. 345.—In West Philadelphia. Meats and provisions. Size 15x28 feet. Does about $11,000, three-fourths cash. Mostly sells meats, so stock only averages $250 No team. Actual net profits, 20 per cent. Owner wishes to change business, for reasons which will be explained. Price inventory. Take around $800. Dwellllng.

No. 346.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats, provisions. Size, 16 x 30. Does $200 to $250 weekly, three-quarters cash, balance weekly. Stock about $500. Push cart delivery. Net profits 12 per cent. Low rent and expenses. Satisfactory reasons for selling Price inventory. For stock and fixtures about $1,200 required. This is an extremely strong small proposition.

No. 347.—In high class part of West Philadelph a. Meats, provisions, canned goods, etc. Size, 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, all cash. Stock $300 to $350. One team. Clear net profits 15 per cent. Rent, $30 monthly. Pay roll, $21 weekly. No real estate. Owner wants to get in other business and will sell at inventory. Cost about about $1,000, without team.

No. 353.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and provisions. Size, 16 x 30 feet. Does $14,000 yearly, two-thirds cash. Dwelling connected. Stock, $1,000 to $1,500. No team. Net profits, 10 per cent. Owner wants to go further into suburbs and will sell at inventory or lump sum of $1,500. Splendid chance for adding meats.

No. 356—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 36 feet. Does $400 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Dwelling connected, if wanted. Stock about $800. Uses one team. Nets clear 10 per cent. Owner needs a rest and his eyesight is failing. Will sell at inventory. Will take about $1,000.

No. 360.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 17 x 30 feet. Does $400 to $500 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock, $6co. Owner takes out $40 weekly, beside living expenses. Uses one team. Good dwelling attached. Owner is going into the saloon business and will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,000. This is a splendid money-making proposition.

No 362.—Near Tioga, Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 20 x 30 feet. Does $125 weekly, half cash. Stock, $1,000 Clean net profits, 15 per cent. Dwelling connected for sale. Owner has Government position and cannot give attention. Will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,500 for stock and fixtures and around $2,500 for the property. Full investigation.

No. 363—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Store 17 x 38 feet. Does $17,000 to $18,000, two-thirds cash. Stock $500. Net profits 10 per cent Good 10-room dwelling connected for sale. Uses one team. Owner has seashore hotel and wants to give it his whole time. Take $2,500 on the property and inventory for stock and fixtures. Established 10 years ago and a very successful business.

No. 365—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 30 feet. Does $350 to $400 weekly, three-quarter cash, balance weekly. Nets clean 10 per cent. above everything. Stock about $900. This store was established seven years ago and is thoroughly prosperous and profitable. The present owner bought it our months ago. He wanted a certain ice cream store which the owner refused to sell and he then bought this store. The ice cream store is now for sale, and as the owner of the grocery prefers that business he wants it if he can get it. Will sell at inventory. Will take all told about $1,600. Fullest investigation.

In all of these the cause of selling is good, and the fullest investigation courted. Every one paying.

These Goods Are Already Sold

Egg-O-See and E-C Corn have been more widely, more systematically and more continuously advertised to your customers than any flaked foods on the market. Everybody knows what they are. It requires no effort to sell them. Simply keep up your stock so you can fill your customers' orders, then they won't go somewhere else to get these popular products.

Egg=O=See Cereal Company

QUINCY CHICAGO BUFFALO

LOWNEY'S COCOA has maintained its high quality unimpaired regardless of the rise in the price of cocoa beans. For years now it has appealed to the best trade on its merits and become A STAPLE ARTICLE with a sure demand, constant and growing. Wide advertising in street cars, newspapers and magazines will go on pushing, pushing, pushing. It is a safe investment, and PAYS A FAIR PROFIT.

LOWNEY'S PREMIUM CHOCOLATE for cooking is of the same superfine quality.

You Are the One That Gets Hurt

When you sell your customers a low-priced coffee. You are taking chances unless it's ARIOSA, because it is very difficult to get a good quality of coffee at a low price and yet have the flavor always the same.

You can't afford to take chances. We buy in larger quantities than any five concerns in the country, and we can afford to give quality and make a price that nobody can duplicate.

How to Make Other Cocoas as Good as Ours

Take the average cocoa on the market and carry it through another process or two, and you may have an article about as good as Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa.

The trouble is that other manufacturers will not use that "other process or two," because of its cost. They prefer to send out their product half made, as it were—containing indigestible and ill-tasting ingredients which should have been eliminated—so that they can save a little on the cost of making.

Croft's Swiss Milk Cocoa has everything taken out that should be taken out, and for that reason, among others, it has the smoothest, finest flavor of any cocoa made.

Will you mention the "Grocery World" when you write?

No Rival for Winorr

THE CORN WITHOUT HULLS

"I wouldn't handle it; I'm selling enough brands of canned corn now?"

Do you say that to our Winorr proposition? If you do, you can hardly know about Winorr, because in the ordinary sense it is not canned corn at all. It is a corn specialty—corn packed without the hulls. You have nothing like it now, and for that reason it competes with nothing and has no competition.

True, it may cut in somewhat to your sales of other brands, but what of it, if it makes you as much profit and gives the customer better satisfaction?

We also pack a full line of finest quality Berries and Vegetables, moist and condensed Mince Meat, Catsup and Salad Dressing.

We are the largest canners of Sauer Kraut in the United States.

"ENTERPRISE"

With New Total Registering Device

The saving of time will doubly pay for it.

The convenience alone will make it worth all it costs.

It is cleaner, as it dispenses with the use of measures and the consequent absence of flies and dirt.

SELF-PRIMING and MEASURING PUMP

Accurately measures molasses, heavy oils, tar and other thick liquids. Has total registering device showing when stock is low in barrel.

No. 97 Pump costs $6.00; Auger, 75 cents; Extension Tube 50 cents a foot.

This Is The Famous Steel Cap

The one that doesn't get a poisonous corrosion on it when it seals jars of fruit. Your customers will never use a zinc cap again if you tell them about this. Try it.

A splendid profit for you. They are getting them at the china stores now. Get this money.

CLEAN, EASY AND PROFITABLE.

Handling Headlight Oil and Gasoline in the old way is hard, dirty, and because it takes so much time and trouble, not very profitable. Handled in our way is as easy as weighing coffee or tea and just as clean, almost as profitable. We will send you our Catalogue B, if you wish, which will show you how to turn this unpleasant feature of your business into a simple sanitary job, increasing your profits to such an extent that our Tanks and Pumps, which work with almost human intelligence, soon pay for themselves.

"As Good as the 'J. M.'"

No delivery wagon built is as good as the "J. M.," though many are said to be. The makers of other wagons do the best they can, but they haven't our facilities.

The "J. M." wagon is the handsomest, longest-lived delivery wagon on the market. No other wagon manufacturer we ever knew rejected everything but second-growth hickory for wheels, as we do.

Write for our catalogue.

FULTON & WALKER CO. TWENTIETH and FILBERT STS. PHILADELPHIA, PA.

A Tin in Every Order

Almost every woman who buys goods of you will include a can of Hoffman House Little Pickles in her order if you'll suggest it.

The second time you won't need to suggest it.

These pickles are cured by a new process—you'll see the difference as soon as you taste them. Tenderer, sweeter, snappier—those are the points.

Packed in prepared tin for reasons that also have much to do with the quality.

CHEERINESS FOR SALE!

With a few electric lights properly disposed, here and there, we can give you a new store.

A store that will not only look new to you, but new to your customers and the passers-by.

A store that will be twice as cheery to work in, to buy in, and to come into from the street.

You wouldn't buy in a gloomy store yourself, if you could avoid it. Can you expect other people to like it any better?

See us about it.

Hams and Bacon Are in Demand

Are you giving your trade the best values for their money? You can easily do so by giving the people what they want and that is which are plump, have short shanks and round butts, are sweet, being sugar cured; mild, because they are not old; and of fine flavor, being smoked a nice, bright color, which is only possible by using hickory wood.

They are sold by the leading retail grocers in Philadelphia, having the most select and exacting trade.

Burk's "Butternut Bacon"

is the only substitute for "Crown Brand" Hams. It is selected from corn-fed hogs, specially cured with granulated sugar—mild and of exquisite flavor and taste.

It is put up in narrow strips, strung with white cord, cut absolutely square, making any waste impossible; wrapped in highly glazed and parchment paper and embellished on two sides with an attractive blue and white label.

A red seal is attached to the cord, stating the specific merits of this bacon, which is also known to the trade as the "5-B" Bacon, because of its name.

Pure Lard

to be at its best must contain all the original natural oils. Many brands of lard are "pure," but lack richness because these oils have been extracted to increase the manufacturer's profits.

BURK'S LARD

is strictly pure and contains all the properties of the wholesome hog fat and nothing else.

A New Canned Corn Idea

There is no better corn grown than Country Gentleman seed. It is firm, sweet, tender and succulent—thousands of people sincerely like it better than Maine Corn.

Onargo Country Gentleman Corn is canned from the finest Country Gentleman seed procurable, and it is cooked by the new automatic cooker in a way which makes it better than Country Gentleman or any other corn has ever been before.

The new automatic corn cooker doesn't perform miracles, but you'll almost think so when you compare its work with the work of the old-fashioned cooker. It simply cooks a can of corn evenly, leaving the edges as tender as the centre, which no other cooker does.

The grocer who keeps abreast of his business will investigate this.

VALUE

Better Than Milk or Meat

¶ Royal Peanut Butter is one of the most healthful food products ever manufactured. We want you to tell this to your customers, and as a real incentive for you to do so we are going to give you the money we would otherwise use to tell consumers of its merit. Universal Coupons packed in every case from January 1, 1908. Remember, it is the best thing of its kind ever made. You make a splendid profit on it and the coupons are exchangeable for any article of merchandise you may need for your home or store.

The Grocer's Power

We make a superfine line of Macaroni, Spaghetti, Noodles and Pastels, but we don't try to make you sell them.

We give you credit for brains—brains to select goods—brains to sell them. You can influence your customers. That's why you are in business.

Wouldn't it be foolish for us to ignore your power and waste advertising trying to make people demand that you sell our goods? We go the other way about it. We spend our advertising money for you, not against you by giving you Universal Coupons with every case of our goods. You can exchange them for many useful articles. It pays to pull together.

Nothing Like It Has Ever Been Made

This picture represents a floor wax which when properly applied makes wood like new. Grocers can build up a big trade on it because their customers need it—they are buying something of the kind now, and are going to paint stores to get it. If you will put a case of MOORE'S WAX where it can be seen and tell your trade what it will do you will get some money that is going somewhere else now. We are making it worth your while to do a little talking for this product by giving you a generous quantity of Universal Coupons with each case. You can buy anything you need with these coupons.

She Always Went Back

"I occasionally try some of these much-advertised soaps," said a lady to one of our customers the other day, "but I always came back to Babbitt's Best. In many years I've never found anything that suited me so well."

Think of the grocer who filled all that lady's orders for Babbitt's Best. No talk—no persuasion—no explaining—no work. Simply filling orders that the soap itself gets.

And at a profit, too—don't forget that.

Where Norwegian Sardines are Different

The real Norwegian sardine, such as we pack, is different from any other sardine in the world. It has a certain savory zest that sets it apart from either French, Portuguese or domestic sardines.

Our Norwegian sardines are little, young white fish, appetizingly smoked and packed in fine olive oil. We will gladly send you a sample can.

Price, $1.00 per dozen; $9.00 per case of 100. Packed with can opener and wrapped in oiled paper.

Be an Expert on Hams

YOU will be surprised to see how many hams you can sell by being able to guarantee every one. Each and every one of SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAMS will back up the strongest guarantee you can give it.

Is there any sense in selling ham that nobody can guarantee?

You can satisfy your trade and increase it by selling SWIFT'S PREMIUM HAMS because their quality never fails.

We keep PREMIUM HAMS well advertised, and that makes them easy to sell.

What the 99 Do

We could probably count a hundred silver polishes, Electro-Silicon and ninety-nine others. The ninety-nine combined probably haven't half as much business as Electro-Silicon alone.

Considering how easy it is to make a "silver polish" it means a whole lot when one silver polish forges so far ahead of its competitors as Electro-Silicon.

It means the results of the enormous advertising we have done, of course, but more than that it means that Electro-Silicon is better.

The advertising we have done and are doing makes business for you as well as for us. No other silver polish is so well known, no other is so easy to sell, no other will please your customers so well.

Always packed in yellow box bearing lady in red.

Everybody Knows Them

Knight's Flavoring Extracts have been pleasing epicures throughout the United States for fifty-nine years. The name Knight on an extract package is a stamp of excellence. Thousands of families can be induced to use nothing else. Most grocers sell them; if you don't, do so now and you will find that the goods not only sell themselves, but that your extract trade will increase. You cannot make a better profit on any first-class brand.

TEAMS COST TWICE AS MUCH

There is no comparison between delivering goods by a team and delivering them by a Lindsley Car. The team way is slower and at least twice as expensive, when you figure up the cost by the year.

If you think of the Lindsley Car as a bad-smelling machine that gets out of order if you look at it, and keeps you poor getting repaired, you never were more mistaken in your life. A boy can run the Lindsley Car and it will need little or no repairing.

We say again—it will carry 1500 pounds thirty miles on a gallon of gasoline, and over rough roads.

Springfield, Ohio, Grocers' Association Sued by Two Retailers for Maintaining Illegal Combination

Twenty-four Members Joined as Defendants in Two Actions by Grocers who Claim they were Injured by Boycotts Instituted Against Manufacturers and Jobbers by Association.

Another retail grocers' association has been sued on an allegation that it was conducting a trust and an illegal combination. The defendant is the Retail Grocers' Association of Springfield, Ohio, and the plaintiffs, who have brought separate actions, are William N. Thomas, proprietor of the Home Supply Co., and William St. John, a retail provision dealer. Thomas claims $10,000 damages.

Mr. Thomas alleges in his complaint that the twenty-four members of the association have entered into a conspiracy to restrain trade and drive him out of business. He claims that the wholesalers have been approached and that the association grocers have threatened a boycott against them if they sell him any goods. He claims that he had to smuggle in his supplies under cover of night, and accused the grocers' association of violating the provisions of the Valentine Anti-Trust Act, for which he threatens to press criminal prosecutions.

About six months ago Thomas interested about 100 residents of the southeastern portion of the city in a proposition to start a co-operative grocery store through which they could get their goods at considerably less cost than the regular grocers were selling them. The residents subscribed what they could and a stock of goods was installed in the little store on Summer street.

Everything went well until about six weeks ago and then Thomas avers in his petition to the court that the members of the local grocers' association began to annoy him because he was underselling them and in this manner taking away many of their regular customers.

In his statement to the court Thomas declares that the local grocers called upon all the leading wholesale houses from which he was obtaining goods and threatened to withdraw their patronage if the proprietors sold any more goods to the Home Supply Co. According to the allegations in the petition this had the desired effect in many cases and the wholesalers refused to dispose of any more goods to Thomas. Several of them, he claims, even went so far as to write him letters, stating the reasons for their refusal.

The case brought by St. John is along the same lines. St. John alleges that the grocers' association threatened to boycott milling companies who sold flour to him; that they protested against cutting rates; that finally they prevented him from obtaining flour from the firms of Anstead & Burk and the Redmond Milling Co.

What Will be Taxed as Oleo.

Internal Revenue Commissioner Capers has issued an important circular addressed to collectors, internal revenue agents and others concerned in which he says:—

> The question as to the taxability or non-liability to tax of many of the so-called shortening compounds or substitutes for lard having been recently raised, I have decided that in the interest of the Government through a proper construction and execution of the Act of August 2, 1886, as amended by the Act of May 9, 1902, as well as in justice to those concerned and for the purpose of securing a uniform ruling covering all such products, a reconsideration of the entire subject is necessary in the premises.

After a lengthy treatment of the arguments on either side of the question, Mr. Capers concludes:

> In view of the foregoing statements, I am of the opinion that all animal fats or oils and vegetable oils separately, and all compounds and mixtures of such animal fats or oils and vegetable oils with or without the addition of coloring matter, which contain more than 1 per cent. of moisture and salt (the limit fixed by the Department of Agriculture under the Pure Food and Drugs Act for lard), or which have been churned in cream, milk or water, or bathed in a solution of brine, thereby imparting to all such animal fats or oil and vegetable oils, and all compounds and mixtures thereof, the flavor, texture, appearance or color of butter, are properly taxable under the law as oleomargarine.
> All animal fats or oils and vegetable oils, all compounds or mixtures of such animal fats or oils, and vegetable oils which are not in the semblance of butter as herein defined, but resemble lard in general characteristics and are not sold or offered for sale as butter or for butter, are exempt from taxation as oleomargarine. Therefore all previous decisions by this office in any way conflicting with this opinion are hereby revoked, this ruling to take effect on and after fifteen days from the date of publication.

California Association Cuts Asparagus Prices Still Lower.

Prices of the California Fruit Canners' Association Lower than Last Year and Lower than Other Packers' Prices Made this Year.

The fact that the packers of California asparagus realize that they must make this year's prices much lower than last year, if any business is to be done, is shown by the new prices of the California Fruit Canners' Association, the coast combination which packs the bulk of the asparagus shipped from California. These prices were named during the week. They are not only much lower than last year, but lower than any prices made by other packers this year.

Following appears the prices made by the Central Canneries earlier this season, and the prices made last year and this year by the California Fruit Canners' Association. Those in the first column are the prices of the Central Canneries, and those in the second and third are the last year and this year's prices of the association:—

	1908.	1907.	1908.
No. 2½ square Mammoth white peeled	$4.85	$6.00	$5.00
No. 2½ square Mammoth white	4.15	4.75	4.00
No. 2½ square mammoth green peeled	4.00	4.50	3.75
No. 2½ square Mammoth green	3.25	4.25	3.00
No. 2½ square large white peeled	4.25	5.25	4 25
No. 2½ square large white	3.50	4.00	3.50
No. 2½ square large green peeled	3.75	4.75	3.50
No. 2½ square green	2.85	3.75	2.75
No. 2½ square medium white	3.25	3.75	3.25
No. 2½ square medium green	2.65	3.50	2.50
No. 2½ square small white	3.00	3.50	2.90
No. 2½ square small green	2.50	3.50	2.25
No. 1 square white tips	3.25	3 60	3.25
No. 1 square green tips	2.50	3.40	2.25

The reduction in the price of green is much greater than in the price of white, which is still comparatively high. The Eastern market takes much more green asparagus than white.

The low prices which are now sure to dominate the market this year leave wholesale grocers still further in the hole with their surplus of unsold asparagus from last year's stock. The situation is made worse by the fact that the new pack asparagus will be shipped from now on.

Jar Prices Named—Very High.

About $3.00 Per Gross Above Last Year's Opening Figures. Caps Also Show Large Advance. Manufacturers Want to Get Back Losses.

The long-expected prices on Mason jars have been named during the week by the combination of makers controlling the industry. They are exceedingly high, and a great howl is going up from the trade in consequence.

The prices named are $8.75 per gross of half gallons; $6.50 per gross for quarts, and $6.13 per gross for pints. This is nearly $3 above the opening prices named last year, though there is not quite so much difference between the new prices and the prices which ruled in May, 1907. Still, by any standard, the prices of jars for 1908 are exceedingly high. Caps are also about $1 higher than last year.

The advance is due entirely to the desire of the jar manufacturers to recoup themselves for the losses which they claim to have made for the last few years. Undoubtedly the demand this year, if the fruit crop materializes, will be enormous in spite of the high prices, and the manufacturers will stand to make a very large sum of money.

Failures Still Show Increase.

Both Grocers' and General Store Lines Show Up Worse in April, 1908, than in April, 1907.

The inventory of failures for the month of April shows, both in grocery and general store lines, a considerable increase over the same month of 1907. The figures are as follows:—

General stores, April, 1908, 140; liabilities, $1,071,436; April, 1907, 83; liabilities, $553,946.

Groceries, April, 1908, 201; liabilities, $560,279; April, 1907, 155; liabilities, $586,612.

Government Wins First Food Suit Under Federal Food Law

Seizes 135 Barrels of American Fruit Products Co.'s Cider, which It Finds is Not Pure Cider, and Court Orders Confiscation. Company Makes No Defence.

In accordance with those provisions of the Federal food law which require the Department of Agriculture to publish reports of convictions after they have been had, the department has certified to the "Grocery World" the facts of a conviction in a case brought against the Semmes-Kelly Co. for the sale of misbranded cider manufactured by the American Fruit Products Co.

The case was tried in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and grew out of the following facts:—

On November 15, 1907, an inspector of the Department of Agriculture purchased from the Semmes-Kelly Co., 621 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C., one barrel of cider labeled "apple cider." This barrel was one of a shipment of 135 barrels from the manufacturers, the American Fruit Product Co., Rochester, N. Y., shipped to the Semmes-Kelly Co. on or about November 9, 1907.

The sample purchased by the inspector was duly analyzed in the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, and the following result obtained and stated:—

Alcohol by volume (per cent.)	11.93
Solids (per cent.)	3.82
Polarization (degrees Ventzke)	4.0
Reducing sugar after inversion (per cent.)	1.28
Sucrose	0.00
Ash (per cent.)	0.277
Benzoic or salicylic acid	None
Alkalinity of ash	30.9 cc N|10 NaOH for 100 cc of cider.
Phosphoric acid, P_2O_5 (per cent)	0.019

The analysis unmistakably proved that this cider was not the pure expressed juice of apples. The quantity of alcohol determined was 11.93 per cent., an amount so great that it was apparent that some foreign sugar had been added. The cider was therefore misbranded within the terms of Section 8 of the act, and on November 22, 1907, the Secretary of Agriculture reported the facts to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia.

Libel for seizure and condemnation of the 135 barrels of cider was duly filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia under Section 10 of the act, upon which seizure was forthwith made and notice given to the Semmes-Kelly Co. and all claimants to show cause why the cider should not be condemned.

Respondent having failed to answer or show any cause against condemnation, the cider was adjudged to be misbranded and ordered to be sold as set forth in the decree hereinbefore stated.

The court rendered the following decree:—

DECREE FOR CONDEMNATION.

On motion of Daniel W. Baker, Esq., attorney for the libellant, and it appearing to the Court that upon the libel filed herein a warrant of arrest was duly issued and served on the 22d day of November, 1907, and that by virtue of the said warrant the Marshal has seized 135 barrels, containing 6,316 gallons, more or less, of liquid branded "apple cider" and inventoried as of the value of $631.60 the said 135 barrels, with contents having been in the possession of the Semmes-Kelly Co., a corporation, respondent, and now being stored in the custody of the said Marshal, and it further appearing that the Semmes-Kelly Co. was duly warned to appear herein on the 16th day of December, 1907, and that due and legal notice and proclamation were given to all other persons having anv claim, right or interest herein to appear on the said date and answer the exigencies of the said libel, and the said Semmes-Kelly Co. having defaulted in filing answer to the said libel, but appearing through its attorneys, Messrs. Douglas and Douglas, and consenting hereto, and no objection having been signified to the Court, it is this 10th day of February, 1908.

Ordered, adjudged and decreed that the said 135 barrels with contents, as aforesaid, branded "apple cider" be and they hereby are declared to be misbranded in violation of the Act of June 30, 1906, as charged in the said libel, and it is further ordered that the said 135 barrels, with contents as aforesaid, branded "apple cider" be, and they hereby are condemned and ordered to be disposed of by sale of the said contents thereof as prayed for in the said libel, and provided for in the said Act of June 30, 1906. It is further ordered that the proceeds of said sale, less the legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

It is provided, however, that upon the payment of all the costs of the proceedings herein, including the costs of hauling, storage, watchman, and all costs incident to or contracted in these proceedings, and the execution and delivery by the said Semmes-Kelly Co., a corporation, to the libellant, of a good and sufficient bond in the penalty of $3,000, conditioned that the said 135 barrels, with contents branded "apple cider" as aforesaid, shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of contrary to the provisions of the said Act of June 30, 1906, the said Marshal shall redeliver the said 135 barrels to the said Semmes-Kelly Co., a corporation, in lieu of disposing of them by sale as aforesaid, the said bond to be filed herein if at all, on or before the 20th day of February, 1908.

Mr. Callanan's Impressions of the National Retailers' Convention. Program of the Jobbers' Convention at Atlantic City Next Month. Small News of the Market.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

New York, May 15, 1908.

Impressions as to the national convention held at Boston this week will be written by L. J. Callanan, who returned yesterday after attending the sessions on the earlier days in the week and reading a paper on the relation of quantity to price.

On two points Mr. Callanan has especially decided views. One is that the number of delegates to conventions should be strictly limited in proportion to the size of the respective associations that they represent, so as to make the meetings more truly and fairly representative.

The second policy which he advocates is that the president and the secretary should both be selected from the same city, so that they may co-operate most conveniently and efficiently. He regards the election of the two officers from different places as a great disadvantage. In his opinion they should both be residents of one of the important centres of the trade or possibly of the national capital.

In the State associations he will advocate also the selection of the two principal executive officers from the same city, such city to be preferably one important as the legislative or as a business centre.

The National Wholesale Grocers' Association gives out from its office in this city the programme of the third annual convention to be held June 2d to 5th in Atlantic City. The Executive Committee is to meet on Tuesday, the opening day. Wednesday morning the Board of Directors will meet and at 11 o'clock the convention proper will be called to order by President William Judson. The Mayor of the city will deliver the address of welcome, to which the response will be made by F. W. Hannahs, the first vice-president of the association.

Thursday reports will be submitted by the Committees on Ways and Means, Pure Food and Contract, the latter having to do with canned goods. Addresses will be delivered by President Charles S. Crary, of the National Canners' Association; John C. Mahlan, who will talk on "Uniform Contracts"; Samuel Mahlan, "Free Deals"; T. F. Whitmarsh, "Uniform Bill of Lading"; Walter F. Chandler, "Reciprocal Demurrage"; W. N. Todd.

Thursday afternoon Mr. Whitmarsh is to speak on "Publicity"; R. E. Bursk on "Membership"; S. B. Steele and F. R. Drake on "Discounts"; Mr. Hannahs on "The Manufacturers."

The annual dinner will be given Thursday night in the Marlborough-Blenheim. Friday will be given over to new business and to the election of officers. Besides the annual dinner, there will be other social events and entertainment features during the week.

A bankruptcy petition was filed Monday against Henry Campbell, who had been in business as Martin & Campbell, as a wholesale and retail grocer at 2 Gouverneur's lane, most of his trade having been in selling supplies to ships. The business was established sixty years ago by Andrew Martin, who died in 1897 and who was an uncle of Mr. Campbell. The creditors allege that Mr. Campbell has admitted in writing that he is insolvent.

A bankruptcy petition has been filed this week against David Hershowsky, who had grocery stores at 141 Essex street and 158 Norfolk street. The creditors allege that he took down the signs over the stores recently, turned the business over to other men who are unknown to the creditors and has not since made his appearance at the stores.

Although an unusually large number of retail grocers have retired, sold out or closed their stores in the last two months, yet it is noted that the stores seldom remain unoccupied long. New men are taking up the work where others left off in the desirable locations and there are about as many grocery stores as there were before. In the outlying portions of the city and especially in Brooklyn, stores are being opened in new locations according as the city keeps on extending, and a list of such new stores opened in the last year would be quite a long one.

The American Dehydrating Co. has now perfected its organization and will shortly place its goods on the market. In fact it has already obtained a good-sized order from the Navy Department. The company has a process of removing all moisture from vegetables and preserving them indefinitely in that dry state. Adding water restores them to their original condition.

FRED. A. MCGILL.

Lowney's Bonbons for the Fleet.

The Navy Department has ordered lot of 40,000 pounds of high-grade chocolate bonbons for the Pacific fleet, to be delivered in San Francisco before the ships sail for the East. Like former orders, these are Lowney's. Since the Spanish War large shipments have been repeatedly ordered for the warships, owing to a conviction on the part of the medical corps that chocolates lessen the desire for strong drink, and are especially good for men in the tropics. Purity flavor and keeping qualities are the three requirements. Every bonbon is wrapped in tin foil and then packed in air-tight tin boxes with screw tops to resist heat and salt air. Jack does not care for the pretty paper boxes landsmen know so well, but he likes the contents and orders in carload lots.

Two-Minute Sermons for the Retail Grocer

XXXVIII.—The Contrary Customer.

The contrary customer may be a good one.

Every merchant, jobber or retailer has his contrary customers, who seem to take the opposite side of every argument used to sell them goods, and disgust the salesman by their continual croaking about their inability to use the goods he tells them are selling well to other people.

This is merely a habit, in most cases, and can be worked to the advantage of the salesman very often if the right tactics are used. At least one good salesman uses the following method to advantage: When he is sure he has hold of a contrary customer, who is bound to buy everything under protest, he makes it a point to show that customer the merchandise he has to offer in a way which makes his contrariness force a sale. For instance, he will say: "Here is something I want to show you, but hardly think it will please your customers. Mr. Blank has been buying a lot of it, but he tells me that he has a line of customers who place a great deal of confidence in his judgment and pay him the price for the goods when he says they are right. These goods are strictly first quality and can be recommended to the highest class of trade, but of course it is probable that the people in your section will not take to them."

This salesman is, of course, talking to a retailer, and the contrary instinct of the buyer will make him feel like buying, just to show the salesman that his customers also have a good opinion of his judgment. The retailer can do the same thing by letting the customer feel that he thinks the goods are a little too high-priced to suit, but that he wanted to show, through special friendliness, what some of the best customers were buying.

The Cost of Biscuit Trust Packages.

The retail grocers of the West are even more determined than those of the East that the Biscuit Trust and kindred concerns shall print the net weight of their packages upon the label. The Biscuit Trust, it will be remembered, said it would leave Nebraska before it would disclose to consumers the amount of crackers they were actually receiving.

In a public statement Mr. E. A. Detrick, proprietor of the Detrick Trading Co., of Caldwell, Kan., shows pretty clearly why the Biscuit Trust finds it good business to hide the net weights of its packages:—

> The famous Uneeda biscuit, 5-cent package, weighs seven ounces gross, five ounces net, costs the customer at the rate of 16 cents a pound. We sell eight ounces in bulk of the same grade crackers for 5 cents. A package selected at random from stock contained twelve whole and ten broken crackers. The manufacturer of this package dares not print the net weight on it, but he lets the consumer believe he is getting eight ounces of crackers for his nickel.
> Taking up this manufacturer's 25-cent size package, which the consumer is buying as a three-pound package, we find that it weighs thirty-eight ounces gross, contains thirty-one ounces net of crackers. We sell forty-eight ounces of the same cracker, from the same manufacturer for 25 cents. Can the workingman's wife afford to pass up that nineteen ounces of crackers, in bulk? No, if she is wise, she will let her 25-cent piece buy 50 per cent. more crackers in bulk.

The minute it breaks upon consumers' minds what they are really paying for Biscuit Trust products, that minute a great many of them will decide that those products are too expensive. The Biscuit Trust knows that perfectly well, and that is exactly its reason for wishing to keep consumers in ignorance. When a concern will go to law simply to prevent its customers from receiving information which they have a right to have, only one explanation is possible—it fears that the information, if disclosed, will hurt business.

An Evasion.

The Toasted Corn Flake Co., apropos of the editorial article in last week's issue on the sale by Siegel & Cooper, the New York department store people, of Toasted Corn Flakes at 5 cents per package, have sent the following letter to all wholesale grocers during the week:—

> On account of an intimation on the editorial page of the "Grocery World" of May 11th, it is considered best to state to you that the Toasted Corn Flakes Co. does not sell Siegel & Cooper direct, or any other retailer here. Please notify your salesmen to this effect.
> Respectfully yours,
> TOASTED CORN FLAKES CO.
> By E. W. Murphy.

This is not a frank answer. It leaves loopholes. The subject is too important for evasions. The Toasted Corn Flakes Co. refuses to sell the organized retailers of Philadelphia, which is its legal right to do if it likes. But in New York a department store, who could hardly do so without the connivance of the Toasted Corn Flakes Co., is selling Toasted Corn Flakes at 5 cents, advertising that it had on hand six hundred cases to dispose of in that manner. This is a serious attack upon the interests of every retail grocer in New York, and in principle upon the interests of grocers everywhere else. No wonder that the Kellogg Co. considers it sufficiently important to notice, but what is its answer? "We do not sell Siegel & Cooper direct." Is that the reply of a concern strong in its own innocence? The "Grocery World" thinks not. Such a concern would have worded its answer something like this: "We neither sell Siegel & Cooper directly or indirectly; neither do we have any knowledge as to who does sell them. We are using every endeavor to discover the jobber who has been selling the concern named, and we can assure you that as soon as we succeed we shall take immediate steps to protect our interests and the interests of the trade."

Had such a letter been received, even the "Grocery World" would have been convinced that the Corn Flakes Co. was innocent of any wrong. But to say "we do not sell direct" is a childish evasion.

For the Kellogg people are not helpless in such a case as this. If Siegel & Cooper have just received 600 cases of Toasted Corn Flakes it would be easy to learn who it came through. Naturally they have the right to buy as much corn flakes as they like, but the courts have long since decided that where a dealer is by unduly low prices undermining a manufacturer's trade, he can be stopped by injunction.

A Mistake.

The "Grocery World" believes that the National Retail Grocers' Association made a mistake in adopting a resolution which demanded the repeal of the present Federal oleo tax. That was probably a case of being used. In the "Grocery World's" judgment, a National Association should not waste time or influence on local questions. In certain sections of the West oleo is in demand and many of the grocers there are legitimately interested in anything which will remove the ban from it. In other sections, as in Philadelphia, oleo is an illegitimate product, not by reason of any vice of its own, but because of the persistent crookedness of those who sold it. The grocers in the latter sections want oleo kept where it is now. The National Association has thus taken a stand not favored by the united trade, but strongly against the interests of what is probably a majority.

Not only for that reason is its attitude ill-advised, but because the Federal oleo law is a good thing. There has been less fraud in the sale of oleo since its passage than ever before in the history of the business. Why? Because the incentive has been largely removed. The man who pays the 10-cent tax finds it no longer possible—except at certain short seasons of the year—to substitute colored oleo for butter.

Free Deals.

The delegates of the National Retail Grocers' Association, as reported elsewhere, adopted a resolution condemning free deals by manufacturers, and the report of the "Grocery World's" convention correspondent indicates that it passed with no opposition whatever.

The "Grocery World" wonders how many of the delegates who blithely voted for that resolution will have the personal courage—or will even feel it their duty—to refuse the next free deal that comes their way.

Philadelphia Sees Plenty of Free Cereals.

Three of the Largest Companies Pull Off Free Schemes at Once. Largest Worked on Mapl Flake. E-C Co.'s Girls Distribute Dollar Bills. Postum Distributes Samples of Post Toasties.

The city of Philadelphia has been knee deep in free cereals during the past week. The Mapl Flake Co. has been carrying on the most expensive and the most extensive sampling scheme ever adopted in this city. On a day which they advertised several days in advance they printed in certain Philadelphia papers a coupon which could be redeemed at any grocer's for a full-sized package of Mapl Flake. The coupon stated that a family was entitled to redeem only one coupon, but it can scarcely be doubted that a large number of families redeemed a great many. The coupons were again redeemable by the grocer for cash or goods at face value with a 15 per cent. increase. As stated, the plan was so big that it is said to have moved a very large quantity of cereal.

The E-C Corn Flake Co. has also been in Philadelphia this week with a scheme by which dollar bills were distributed. The real inwardness of the plan was not disclosed in the very large advertisements used, but the plan on the surface looked big.

While these plans were going on the Postum Cereal Co. has been distributing a large number of samples of Post Toasties.

Unnecessary Price Cuts

I often wonder whether a very large proportion of the declines in price made by the retail merchants of this country aren't wholly unnecessary.

My personal belief is that the price of an article is oftener declined unnecessarily than necessarily.

The belief which lies at the bottom of price-cutting is that a sale is more easily effected at 8 cents, say, than at 10 cents.

Undoubtedly it is to some people. The proportion who would buy at 8 cents, but who would refuse to buy at 10, however, I believe to be a great deal smaller than the average merchant has any idea of.

Recently I went into a central drug store in search of a certain throat lozenge. It had been advertised in the magazines at the retail price of 25 cents, and I was prepared to pay 25 cents.

Primarily I wanted the lozenges, and had the price been even 50 cents the chance is I might have reluctantly squeezed it out.

The druggist had reduced the price to 20 cents. Not because anybody had refused to buy at 25, but because he heard that somebody else had reduced it.

When I say that "primarily I wanted the lozenges," I touch what in my judgment is the root of the whole matter. I grant you that a cut price may be needed in cases where a consumer doesn't particularly want an article and where an attempt is being made to force it on him.

A lot of men will buy anything that's cheap, whether they want it or not. With them a cut price is an ever-present bait.

But the consumer who sets out to buy a certain thing, not because it's cheap, not on account of the price at all, but because he wants or needs it—the cut price is no inducement to him: he wants the goods.

Of course price cuts some figure even here, because it may prove to be beyond the buyer's limit. If a man can't afford to pay more than 10 cents for a package of rolled oats, he will probably go without rather than pay 25, no matter how badly he wants it.

But a cut from 10 to 8 has no weight with him. And that is what I am considering particularly—the little cuts.

Most retailers make these little cuts for one reason only—because some competitor has. Occasionally you will find a dealer who cuts blindly and with no reason whatever—deliberately breaks a market.

The name I would apply to him is too impolite to print.

The dealer who cuts because a competitor has, almost always attaches undue importance to the matter. To begin with not one customer out of twenty shops around and keeps posted on what other grocers are getting for this and that.

They keep pretty closely to the one grocer.

Even if one out of twenty may know that his grocer's price on a given article is a cent or two above some other grocer's price, it doesn't follow that he is going to the cheap grocer to buy.

Oftener than not it would mean inconvenience, opening a new account or paying cash—a general nuisance worth a good deal more than a penny or two.

All for one article.

I know perfectly well that there is a class of consumers, in certain communities, who shop around religiously and always put the price above the quality. While in the abstract their money is as good as anybody else's, still if I were a grocer I should not care if I lost this trade entirely.

When a retail grocer has an impulse to cut a price on something, he ought, in my judgment, to ask himself this question: Is this decline really necessary? Has the sale been interfered with by the former price? Has anybody complained of the price? Can I expect to sell enough more at the reduced price—and the reduced profit—to make the cut profitable?

Final Decision Against Colored French Vegetables.

Three Secretaries Decide that They Cannot be Imported Under Federal Food Laws, but Permits Them to Enter Until January 1, 1909.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 14, 1908.

The three secretaries in charge of the enforcement of the Federal food law have issued the following official order as to colored French vegetables, which becomes Food Inspection Decision No. 92:

THE USE OF COPPER SALTS IN THE GREENING OF FOODS.

As provided in Food Inspection Decision 76, the Secretary of Agriculture has considered the question of foods greened with copper salts. It has been decided that foods so treated are not entitled to entry into the United States under the provisions of Section 11 of the Food and Drugs Act. Inasmuch as contracts have already been made for the present year's pack, until January 1, 1909, all vegetables greened with copper salts, but which do not contain an excessive amount of copper and which are otherwise suitable for food, will be allowed entry into the United States, if the label bears the statement that sulphate of copper or other copper salts have been used to color the vegetables. On and after January 1, 1909, no foods greened with copper salts will be allowed entry into the United States.

National Retail Grocers' Convention Meets in Boston

One Hundred and Fifty-five Delegates Present from Twenty-nine States. Manufacturer's Right to Fix Retail Price Leading Topic. Convention Finally Adopts Guarded Resolution. Assumes Attitude Against Present Oleo Tax. Summaries of Several Addresses on Live Topics. Mr. Callanan's Ringing Talk on Should the Quantity Make the Price. All Old Officers Re-elected.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Boston, Mass., May 14, 1908.

The eleventh annual convention of the National Retail Grocers' Association has been held in this city during Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of the week just past. The original place of the meeting was Faneuil Hall, and delegates were present from twenty-nine States and the District of Columbia.

The hall was comfortably filled on Monday morning at 10.30 when the convention was called to order. President A. L. Stark, of the Boston Retail Grocers' Association, called to order, and introduced Rev. E. A. Horton, chaplain of the Massachusetts State Senate, who offered a prayer. President Stark then welcomed the delegates in behalf of the local organization, and made a plea for unity and strength in order to escape trust domination and for the general good of the trade.

The State of Massachusetts welcomed the delegates through Representative Robert Luce, of Somerville. He made a snappy speech which caught the convention. The formal response was made by Frank B. Connelly, of Colorado. The welcome of the city was extended by W. D. Colton, an alderman, and William Gray, of Brooklyn, N. Y., ex-secretary of the association, responded.

James J. Storrow, president of the Boston Merchants' Association, related his experience with grocers in his work of relief for the Chelsea sufferers. Rations have been issued to about 3,000 people daily, he said, and most of the food has been contributed by the Boston grocers, who also have given the free service of their teams. He had noticed that as a rule there are two forms of government in this State. In the smaller towns most of the government business appears to be transacted in the grocery stores, and this "grocery store government" is a credit to the trade. The other form, of course, is the regular municipal government. The speaker emphasized the value of organization of trade interests.

Several other brief addresses of welcome and responses were made.

The first set address was by E. A. Stevens, a former organizer for the National Association. His subject was the "Pure Food Question and Its Effect on Civilization." The main portion of the address follows:—

When the grocery business of the United States becomes thoroughly organized, which I believe it eventually will, would it not appear obligatory that some competitive examination or some proper restriction be placed on persons desirous of entering it, so that through its operation, as well as through the enforcement of the pure food law requirements, the ignorant and filthy were gradually weeded out of the trade, not only to safeguard the best interests of the grocers, but to better preserve the health and welfare of the people at large? Such restrictions would have an elevating tendency on the personnel of the trade It would radically change the character of the retail grocer's business methods, even to his advertising. He could no longer endeavor to draw trade from his competitor by price cutting. He must advertise and see to it that his goods are absolutely fresh and of first quality, that his store is the most attractive, his service the most prompt and his employees the most polite and accommodating to be found anywhere. And why should not all this be so? If any place should be made scrupulously clean and inviting, that from which we obtain our food certainly ought.

The grocery trade of the future, under the evolutionary influence of this National retail grocers' movement—a movement which is pledged to higher standards and better business methods, and opposed to schemes and processes which degrade and cheapen—may become an Aladdin's palace, an enchanting scene.

The grocery of the future, no doubt, will more than surpass even our wildest imaginings. All the viands dispensed therefrom will be put up in the most fanciful and appetizing forms and arranged in the most artistic and aesthetic manner. Mosaic floors, frescoed walls and ceilings, marble counters, groups of statuary representing Pomona, Ceresa, Flora, etc., will be concomitants. Attractive little cozy nooks, where weary customers may sit, write letters, read the news, sip tea, claret or lemonade and listen to enchanting music furnished by a first-class orchestra, while charmingly attired and attractive ladies flit around taking orders—all these are among the possibilities, yes, the probabilities of the future. In fact, in a few cases are now actualities.

You should strive, as members of this organization, to uphold the dignity and importance of your profession. You should aim to bring to it all the knowledge, all the science, all the familiarity with art and artistic effects of which we may be possessed, or which we can possibly acquire, and feel that in so doing you are bringing worthy gifts to a worthy cause. Political issues, moral and ethical theories, social problems—all are involved in the food question and this food question is one in which the grocers' association is vitally interested.

In the afternoon the delegates were the guests of the Boston Retail Grocers' Association in a 30-mile trolley trip.

The feature of the evening session on Monday was an address by the National President, Charles J. Kramer, of Little Rock, Ark. Some points from this address follow:—

At almost every convention we have held a lot of resolutions and requests have been adopted and then never carried out. What do some of the manufacturers and jobbers care for them as long as you as individuals refuse to comply with your own resolutions? The trouble is you are not cautious enough, do not use diplomacy, do not think, and have no faith in your competitor. Get in close touch with your officers, pay more attention to the information that they give you, and then try and work together, but don't always think that some fellow is getting a "handout" because he is trying to give you some sound advice. That is one of the worst drawbacks to the retail trade.

An association is what its members make it. The association itself can do nothing, but the members with their undivided interest can make it a success, and that is a duty that each and every one of you owes to one another. You talk about organizing. What good does it do to organize unless you co-operate with each other? Don't think that your officers have any more time than yourself to devote to association work. They have their business as well as yourself. Don't think that any difference is shown a man who has $100 capital or $100,000. They all look alike to me. They are all working for one common interest. They are placing the goods of the manufacturer in the homes of the consumer.

They are doing it for the benefit of the manufacturer and to be prepared to take care of the consumer, and to do all this we must still have the wholesaler to carry the goods in stock for the retailer. It is the wholesaler who puts the retailer in business, who provides him with his opening stock. It is also the wholesaler who very often unwisely loads up the retailer without thinking that he is putting him in jeopardy by having him carry more stock than his business will demand. Mr.

Wholesaler, this is where you err, in trying to force sales because the manufacturer has loaded you up with a lot of goods that are unsalable. These are some of the reasons why the retailer sometimes has to retire from business with less on hand than when he started.

Were I to attempt to express to you my ideas on that great problem now confronting the American merchant—the parcels post—you might say as one of our trade papers stated: "Be sane, Mr. President, be sane," and I want to say to you that if this thing should pass it will drive some of the merchants and the trade press insane, especially those who are living in the rural districts.

The principal business of Monday evening's session was the delivery by Secretary John A. Green of his report for the year. The substance of the report is as follows:—

PURE FOOD.

It has been our purpose during the last year to advise every member of our association to throw open his doors to the food inspector and solicit an investigation of any and all goods contained in the store.

That if any goods on hand did not conform to the requirements of the law, after being given due notice of same, the grocer should at once return such goods to the place of purchase. Nothing is gained in the long run by trying to evade the law.

If men make impure food they are animated by selfish motives. They desire a larger profit, and endeavor to educate the public for cheap things.

We should, to the extent of our ability, strive to encourage the dealer to keep the best stock on hand, get a good, legitimate profit which the consumer does not object to, provided the goods are right.

We have nothing to lose and everything to gain by the passage of the pure food law, which will prevent the sale of adulterated or misbranded goods.

However, it is important that such laws should be clear and concise.

During the changing of the pure food laws, whether it be local, State or National, the grocers' associations could not spend the time to better advantage than by discussion of any bill presented to the Legislature or the National House of Representatives.

I would advise that everyone get into the habit of looking carefully at every label, and to be particular as to the guarantee which should accompany every bill of goods.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.

During the past three years we have made an earnest effort to have the Bankruptcy Act amended so as to give relief from the ever present dead beat, who, after securing all the credit possible, wipes out all indebtedness by taking advantage of the Bankruptcy Act.

It is with much satisfaction that I say to you to-day that during the last three years we have made more progress in acomplishing this than in the preceding years.

Representative Sherley, of Kentucky, introduced the present bill in the House of Representatives to bring about this relief. A bill providing that no person shall take advantage of the Bankruptcy Act unless he owes more than $300.

Senator Knute Nelson, of Minnesota, has introduced another bill in the Senate which provided that no person shall take advantage of the Bankruptcy Act unless they owe more than $500.

This is the bill which we are trying to have passed.

During the last three weeks some effort has been made to get this bill out of the hands of the sub-committee to whom it was assigned and brought before the Judiciary Committee, who would recommend the bill to Congress and have it placed on the calendar for consideration.

Our association friends in Washington have been of much assistance to us at all times in attending the meetings of the Judiciary Committee in behalf of the bill.

Mr. M. L. Corey, secretary of the National Hardware Association; Mr. Chas. E. Meek, of the National Credit Men's Association, and Mr. G. O. Fessenden, of the same asso-tion, have been untiring in their efforts in trying to secure a hearing for this bill.

This will prove to you that we are making rapid progress along these lines, and no doubt in the near future we shall have some relief from this unfair measure.

PARCELS POST.

It is not my purpose to take into consideration the parcels post.

We shall have with us Wednesday morning one of the ablest exponents in the United States of opposition along this line, Mr. Chas. W. Burrows, of Ohio, one of the largest business men in the United States, Vice-President of the National Board of Trade and a graduate of West Point.

However, I would like to call to your attention an interview with Congressman Overstreet, in which he says:—

> Some people have said that the system has worked admirably in England, and for that reason it ought to work that way here. Also some have mentioned Germany, and said that it should work here as in that country.
> Some of our forefathers came over from Great Britain and Germany because they wanted a change.
> In England the conditions caused by their small territory make a large difference. There the Government operates the telegraph wires in connection with the postal system. In Germany there are no express companies.
> Will the establishment of this system tend to keep the population of the country scattered, or will it cause the people to come closer together in the already overcrowded cities? The interurban railroad and the telephone have done their part to scatter the population properly, and it is a well-established fact, advanced by students of the matter that the more little business nerve centres we can keep scattered over the country, the better that will maintain the country's equilibrium.
>
> Statistics show that three-fifths of the population of the country is living in rural districts, towns of less than 2,000 inhabitants, and in the country. It is the little business centres in these localities of rural districts that keep the population of the nation scattered. If this parcels post system is established, what will the mail order houses do? I am not against those kinds of business firms. They are conducted legitimately, but I do not think that the Government should go into partnership with them. If Congress should enact a law that would benefit these concerns, how long will the little business nerve

TIN CANS

METAL SHIPPING PAILS

No Boxing or Crating Necessary

FOR Coffee and Spices we believe you will find this new metal shipping pail the best transportation package on the market to-day. It has been perfected only through practical and exacting experiment. We believe it to be practically theft-proof. The cover fits into the pail and is fastened by clinching the cover-lugs over the wired top of the pail. In addition we furnish small steel fasteners (not shown), which are clinched over the cover-lugs and effectively prevent theft in transit.

This galvanized shipping pail is made in four sizes: Small, Medium, Large, Extra Large.

DON'T THINK IT

Don't think that because you have not installed an American Slicing Machine you are not paying for it.

You are; and perhaps a number of times.

You are paying for it, because you are sacrificing at less than cost the end of every piece of meat you buy, because you cannot slice it properly by hand.

You are paying for it, because you are using the time of your best clerks in slicing meat by hand, when with our machine the boy who sweeps out the store could do as much work as all of them put together and do it several times as well.

You are paying for it if you handle sliced meats in tins or jars, because you are paying the packers a substantial profit for the labor of packing when you could save this profit, and give your customers better meat besides.

You are paying for it, because you are losing the trade of many of the people of your vicinity, not only on sliced meats, but on other things as well. They are buying their sliced meats where they can get the meat cut just the thickness they want it, every slice even and uniform and fresh from the best cuts, and when they are buying sliced meats at another store, rest assured they are buying their other supplies there as well.

We know you need the machine, and we'd like a chance to tell you more about it.

Our catalogue and booklet are free for the asking.

centre last in communities of less than 10,000? Either the men of the land would have to turn back to the plow or float with the rest into the congested cities.

Congressman Overstreet is chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post Roads.

The Postmaster-General, in explaining his plans, said:—

> The extension proposed would enable the Department to ascertain how far we can safely go, and also adapt itself generally to new requirements. But by making a comparatively small extension of the service we could determine whether it would be advisable to go farther. I shall only indicate in my annual report the belief that the establishment of a local parcels post service in the big cities would be advisable, but shall not urge the incorporation of that feature into law at present.

This will show to you conclusively that what has been said along the lines of parcels post in regard to this bill being but an entering wedge for greater possibilities is true.

Finding the impossibility of passing such a radical bill as the Henry Bill, they turn their attention to something that looks plausible, and which I assure you is but the beginning of more radical legislation.

KNOWING GOODS.

The educational influence of the association teaches us the necessity of knowing familiarly the cost of goods as well as the cost of distribution. At the recent convention held in Kentucky, the representatives of the jobbers and the representatives of the milling interests both dwelt upon this point at length, being satisfied that if a merchant educated himself along these lines that much of the demoralization and failure now prevalent would be obviated.

The old saying, that "competition is the life of trade," is erroneous. Blind, ignorant, pernicious competition is bad, and brings nothing but disaster. Clean store, good methods, polite attention. That kind of competition is good for the entire trade as well as the consuming public.

The fact that goods are sold on a small margin makes it necessary that they should be paid for at the earliest possible moment. The system of extended credit is obsolete, and the merchant who does business along these lines is behind the time and is courting sure failure.

The meeting often together of men in the same lines of business is as much a necessity as it is to unlock the door of your store in the morning to do the business of the day.

At the Monday evening session a report was also made by T. P. Sullivan, of Chicago, chairman of the Legislative Committee. Mr. Sullivan referred to the work of his committee in promoting opposition to the parcels post bill; promoting pure food legislation in both national and State Legislatures, endeavoring to have the bankruptcy law amended and in securing the passage of a law reducing letter postage to one cent. He briefly sketched, in detail, what has been accomplished in each State, and demonstrated that the measures which the association has pushed have made great progress, and that in consequence the retail grocers in those States are hundreds of thousands of dollars better off.

On Tuesday the convention deserted Faneuil Hall, as it was quite evident that it was too open to street noises. Before the desertion, however, Mr. L. J. Callanan, the well-known New York retailer, delivered a stirring address on "Should the Quantity Make the Price." He said in part as follows:—

> I have been assigned to speak to you on a question which should never have arisen in this free country—the right of men in business to purchase the goods in which they deal from the manufacturers or producers at the lowest price. This question has been brought prominently to the front by the wholesale grocers' associations in their efforts to prevent the manufacturers and producers of food products to sell them direct to the retail grocer. It is their claim that they can distribute all the food products of the country which are sold in grocery stores cheaper and more economically than any other way.
> The demand is created by whom? Not by the wholesaler, but by the manufacturer and the retailer. After the demand is created the wholesaler stocks the goods and then demands that the manufacturer shall not sell them to the very men who created the demand for them—even if they buy the quantity the manufacturer decides to sell at the lowest price. What an impudent demand!
> The wholesaler tells you that he is your friend. He tells you that you cannot carry every article you sell in the quantity necessary to get the lowest price. There is no question about that—neither can the wholesaler. For that reason the jobber is a necessity. Should that prevent the retailer from buying the largest part of his stock direct from the manufacturer or producer? Certainly not—if he has the money to pay for it and the outlet for it in his business.
> It is claimed by the wholesalers that they distribute 85 to 90 per cent. of the goods sold in retail grocery stores in this country, and for that reason they should be allowed to control the remaining 10 to 15 per cent. —in this way putting a premium on incompetence — for it is incompetence and neglect to learn the business that puts the 85 to 90 per cent. of the retail grocers of this country in the power of the wholesalers.
> Place yourself in the 10 to 15 per cent. list of men who can buy and pay for the 25, 50, 100-case or carload lots which the manufacturer decides will be the smallest quantity he will sell at the lowest price, and then ask why you should pay a toll of ten per cent., more or less, to any man or firm who trades in the goods you sell. The manufacturer tells you that he has entered into an agreement with an association which claims that it sells 85 per cent. of the trade of this country in food products and they demand the right to sell the other 15 per cent., or they will not handle his goods. You will say to him, "Why should you protect him? Am I not entitled to your protection as well as the wholesaler?" The answer to

THE GROCERY MARKETS

Tea.

The tea market is unchanged for the week. The demand is perhaps slightly better and prices are unchanged. It has been disclosed during the week that the stocks of tea of all grades now in New York warehouses is about one-third less than usual, which while it has not advanced the price, has made holders of teas feel better. New Japan teas are going out moderately, still on last year's basis.

Coffee.

The market for Rio and Santos coffee options has advanced slightly during the week, owing to the consistent support of the syndicate. The latter interests seem to still have some hope of forcing the roasting trade to relieve them of some of their enormous old crop holdings before the full flush of the new crop is felt. The trade, however, seem not to be tempted and follow an equally consistent hand-to-mouth policy. As far as can be learned, little or none of the syndicate's holdings have been marketed. The scarcity of old crop smooth drinking Santos continues to be felt, and certain grades of roasted coffee have advanced on that account during the week. Roasters seem to prefer to put up their prices rather than run the chance of sending out Rio-flavored coffee.

Sugar.

The raw sugar market has weakened considerably, and sales have been at appreciable reductions during the past week. There has been no decline in refined, and there probably will not be if the demand opens up shortly. Already, as strawberries are commencing to come into the market, the demand for sugar shows some little increase.

Syrup and Molasses.

Glucose shows no change for the week. Compound syrup is in fair demand, considering that the weather is not syrup weather. Sugar syrup is in good demand also for the season, no change having occurred in price. Molasses is unchanged and quiet.

Fish.

The past week has been marked by a slight weakening in the mackerel market. New Irish mackerel have declined about $1, mainly because they opened so unusually high. Norway 3s have also settled down somewhat below the last quoted price. Cod, hake and haddock are unchanged and dull. Salmon is in fair demand at ruling prices. No new prices have been named on new domestic sardines as yet, and probably none will be made. The combine packers have announced that no price would for the present be made, but orders would be taken subject to approval of price. They did guarantee, however, that the prices when finally named would be as low as any of their competitors, but inasmuch as all the competitors of any importance are members of the combine, this guarantee is not as large as it looks. Foreign sardines are unchanged and in quiet demand.

Canned Goods.

Tomatoes are unchanged in price, both spot and future. Spot tomatoes, however, are in better demand than for some time. Corn is still dull, but perhaps shows some little improvement in demand. Prices are unchanged, the market being weak. Peas are dull. Jobbers are considerably disappointed because prices on spot are about 20 cents below what they expected them to be. Future peas will remain steady until the danger point of weather has passed. Apples are unchanged and dull. Peaches are selling in a small way, but there is no general demand. Baltimore small canned goods are dull and unchanged in price, the canning season coming along with good prospects. California canned goods are unchanged, no particular business doing in first hands. The jobbers are gradually working out of their stock of old goods.

Beans and Peas.

Pea beans are still firm at a price of $2.55 to $2.60 on spot. This shows a marked advance from a few weeks ago. The demand is fair. Marrows range from $2.30 to $2.40, and are equally firm. California limas show no change from last week. Split and dried peas are unchanged in price and in fair demand.

Dried Fruits.

Prunes show no change from last week. The market on the coast is stiff, but not quite so much so in the East. Peaches are selling fairly at prices that still show downward tendency. Prices on new peaches range from 6½ to 7 cents f. o. b. for choice fruit. This is a little under the average spot price. Apricots are still dull and comparatively weak. Currants are in fair demand for the season at unchanged prices. Raisins are dull and weak. Some new citron has sold at the recently reported future prices. Dates and figs are unchanged and dull.

Butter.

The butter market is steady at a decline of 4 cents in all grades. This is entirely a seasonable decline, due to considerably increased production. The market is lower at the present writing than for about two years. The quality of the butter now arriving is very fine, and a lively trade is likely at prevailing prices. Up to the present time the receipts have cleaned up on arrival. The future of the market depends on the supply, which will probably be a little larger than last year, owing to the favorable spring weather.

Eggs.

There has been no change in the price of eggs during the past week. The market is steady at last week's price. There is a fair movement in all grades, both for consumptive and speculative purposes, and the market is likely to remain as now for a few days at least, after which weather conditions and the production will predominate.

Cheese.

The market on old cheese remains unchanged. There is an active demand for what few remain, which will likely go out at unchanged prices. There has been considerable new cheese in during the week, and each successive shipment shows improving quality. It will be two or three weeks yet, however, before full grass cheese appears and the quality becomes as good as it will be. New cheese is now ruling from 2 to 3 cents below the price of old and the receipts clean up readily.

Provisions.

The provision market is unchanged throughout. The supply of smoked meats is ample, and there is not likely to be any change in the near future as the season advances and the demand gets better. Pure and compound lard are unchanged and show an active tendency. Barrel pork and canned meats are unchanged. Dried beef is firm at an advance of 2 cents, due to increased demand and reduced supply.

Produce.

Bermuda onions, $1.25 to $1.35 per bushel crate; Texas, $1.25 to $1.40 per bushel crate; Egyptian, $2.90 to $3 per 2-bushel bag, demand fair; Pennsylvania potatoes, 80 to 90 cents per bushel; York State, 75 to 85 cents per bushel, demand fair; sweet potatoes, firsts, $1 to $1.25 per basket; seconds, 50 to 60 cents per basket, demand fair; spinach, 25 to 50 cents per barrel, demand poor; rhubarb, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches, demand fair; watercress, $1 to $1.50 per 100 bunches, demand slow; red radishes, $1 to $2 per 100 bunches; white, $1.50 to $2 per 100 bunches, demand good; scullions, 75 cents to $1.25 per 100 bunches, demand good; horseradish, domestic, $1.50 to $2.50 per barrel; Western, $3 to $4 per barrel, demand fair; salad, good is bringing 5 to 6 cents per head; poorer stuff is selling at 2 to 3

Window-Dressing Articles Wanted

For several months the "Grocery World" has been looking for the right man to take charge of its "Window-Dressing Department" and contribute a good, suggestive weekly article. We have tried several, but none was exactly what was wanted.

We will now attempt to get these articles from our subscribers, probably every one of whom has some technical knowledge of window-dressing. What we want is articles clearly describing window displays that can be made by the average retailer; not necessarily new or original—in fact, those which have been used successfully are perhaps preferable to all others.

For all acceptable articles, the "Grocery World" will pay an average price of $5 each. All matter sent in under this arrangement should be addressed to the "Window-Dressing Department." If drawings are also sent they should be made throughout in black ink (not pencil).

cents per head, demand fair; asparagus, 15 to 20 cents per bunch, demand good.

Green Fruit.

Bananas, firsts, $1.50 to $1.75 per bunch; 8-hands, $1.10 to $1.35 per bunch; 7-hands, 75 to 90 cents per bunch; 6-hands, 50 to 60 cents per bunch; red, $1.50 to $2.50 per bunch, demand poor; apples, Baldwins, $3.50 to $4; Spy, $3 to $4; Russets, $2.50 to $3.50, demand fair; pineapples, $2.25 to $2.75 per box, demand fair; grapefruit, $3.50 to $6 per box, scarce and good demand; Florida oranges, $3.50 per box; California, $3.25 to $3.75 per box, demand fair to good; lemons, $2.25 to $3.25 per box, demand fair to good.

Nuts.

Peanuts, green, choice, 4½ cents per pound; fancy, 6½ cents per pound; jumbo, 7½ cents per pound; roasted, choice, $1.15 per bushel; fancy, $1.50 per bushel; jumbo, $1.65 per bushel, demand fair; almonds, 17 to 18 cents per pound; Brazils, 10 cents per pound; filberts, 10¼ cents per pound; pecans, 10 cents per pound; walnuts, 11½ to 12½ cents per pound; mixed, 11 cents per pound, demand poor.

INDIVIDUAL MARKET REPORTS.

Sugar.

The quieter tone that prevailed at the close last week continued. Owners held out well, but in quite a few instances the sugars on offer have been afloat, some had already arrived, and others were for prompt shipment. The refiners' stocks have been good and they were in better shape to stay out of the market than were the sellers. The result has been a decline to 4.36 cents, 1-16 cent lower than the previous quotation. Sugars are offered at 4.36 cents. There are no buyers.

There hasn't been anything new in so far as regards crop conditions. A few more factories have shut down in Cuba, leaving only 23 now in operation, and the receipts for the seven days were less. Not more than 925,000 tons will be produced, and we will have a big deficiency to make up through foreign beets. Prices have already advanced because of the decreased sugar production; we must wait a little while to give consumption a chance to catch up. It will be the relation of consumption to production that will determine future values, and consumption will depend very largely upon the yield of the fruit crops and be influenced, of course, by the state of general business. Everything so far has been all right and sugar values in their advances have only been keeping pace with the conditions as they have developed. When we try to go ahead too fast we meet with setbacks. We can't get to-day a price that will measure conditions that are to exist in June, July and August, when business in refined will be greatly increased, with the crops all finished, and the demand being supplied from the stored-up stocks. Then the shortages in the world's crops will be emphasized. We don't feel them so much now, but warm weather will mean inroads upon the quantities held, with no chance of new sugars until the next crops, and with the diminished supply we have to work on this year and a consumption that will equal last year's at least, we believe it safe to figure that prices will show greater improvement and that this summer's business in refined will hold good profits for the wholesale grocers on contracts placed beforehand.

An important development has been the reduction in the English sugar duty. The budget brought in cut the sugar tariff in half. That means a big increase in the United Kingdom consumption and it's a good thing to help in the upbuilding of strong markets.

Selling Talks With Grocery Clerks

"Mutual Aid Sheets" Which a Large Eastern Retail Grocer Tucks in Each Clerk's Weekly Pay Envelope. Some Advice from the Head of the House on Selling Goods and Other Subjects.

[The "Grocery World" has come into possession of a series of "Mutual Aid Sheets," which are weekly little talks issued regularly to its clerks by one of the large retail grocery stores of the East. The talks are typewritten and a copy is enclosed in each clerk's pay envelope. They are so soundly practical and so useful generally that it is this journal's purpose to publish them weekly or bi-weekly for the edification of other clerks as well as other grocers who have clerks.—Ed.]

GUESSING CONTEST.

A guessing contest is somewhat of a departure for us. Nevertheless, we have adopted one so as to vary things a little. The south window will be filled with ginger snaps Monday night. The boy or girl that guesses nearest to the number contained in the window will get a $5 gold piece. Full details in Monday afternoon's paper Conditions of being an eligible guesser entails the purchase of 10 cents' worth.

"GOOD MORNING."

We want to refer again to the importance of saying in a pleasant way to our customers when they approach the counter, "Good morning" or "Good afternoon." The writer was recently very much impressed with the manner in which this habit is carried out in a certain store in Elizabeth, N. J. The customers seemed to appreciate the polite yet simple reception in the form of these two words. Let us keep this habit up and you will find after a while that your customer will meet you half way and it will be they who will greet you.

SELL LARD.

Make extra effort on our Laurel lard this week. It will be advertised at 11 cents a pound. Pure lard is far cheaper at 10 cents than compound at 8 cents. Things fried in Laurel lard are sweet. Things fried in compound have a strong flavor. The frying process fills the kitchen and often the whole house with a nasty smell. "Laurel" lard when used for shortening makes a rich, flaky crust. You may sell the 10-pound net weight wooden pails for $1.05. You may sell the 50-pound net weight pails for $4.75. Keep a small pail of each kind of lard handy and let the customer smell the difference. This smelling method is good. It's good when you grind a pound of coffee and put it in the bag to hold it up to the customer's nose.

ROLLED OATS.

Recent sampling and couponing and general newspaper advertising of the "freak" goods has had a serious effect on the sale of rolled oats. It has left us at the beginning of the warm season with a big stock. We'll commence a sale Monday at six pounds for 21 cents. The window display will be unique. The drop is 9 cents on six pounds, and we want big results from it. Fill a large glass dish with this straight kiln-dried oats and in it put a new wooden spoon as well as a ticket printed in red. Barrel price, $5.95.

Refined Sugar.—Federal advanced prices from 5.20 cents prompt shipment and 5.30 cents delayed shipment, making both prompt and delayed 5.40 cents, less 1 per cent. cash. All the refiners now quote the same basis. Business is quiet and the stocks held throughout the country will have to be used up before we feel any improvement here.

Spices.

The market during the past week shows a decided improvement. There is a better demand throughout the list. Low values at present have proven quite attractive, especially to grinders, who have taken advantage of the low markets to cover future requirements.

Pepper.—Singapore is exceedingly scarce and what little is on the way has been practically sold. This should have the effect of making a firmer and higher market. Lampong is also scarce on spot and white peppers are exceedingly low in price.

Cayennes rather quiet, but very firm in price.

Cloves.—Holland is much cheaper than our market. Demand is very steady and stocks are small.

Mace.—Practically unchanged during the week; prices, however, are steady.

Pimento (Allspice)).—Stocks are very small and the quality is poor. Practically all goods in Jamaica have been sold and the stock of same has been shipped to Europe.

Nutmegs.—Very active at present. Prices are lowest ever known. Buyers are certainly safe at present values.

Cassias.—Spot prices unchanged, although lower prices are now ruling in the East.

Gingers.—Very scarce and the demand is increasing. The tendency certainly appears upward.

Seeds.—All steady; demand very fair. Celery, Caraway and Mustard are unchanged.

THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING

This Department is devoted to the criticism of advertising matter sent in, to the devising of new advertising ideas for special occasions, upon request, and to the suggesting of original advertisements when data is supplied. All communications sent in for this Department should be addressed to the Editor of Science of Advertising. They will be filed in their order and taken up according to strict rotation.

I have received from John Brayshaw, Jr., Washington, D. C., a copy of a neat advertising card which he has used in the regular course of his business. Here is the main side:—

Easter Eggs 19c dozen
They are fresh, large, clean; many white ones among them suitable for dyeing White Rabbit Egg Dye, 8 colors in package 5c.

Best Elgin Butter 35c pound
Highest grade, fresh pound prints, not solid-packed renovated butter which many are selling as Elgin. We handle this grade also in prints at 29c pound.

Easter Hams 15c pound
Very select, lean, mild cured. Specially selected for most particular trade. The flavor will restore your appetite after the Lenten Season.

Roast Pork for Easter 15c pound
Lamb, Veal and all cuts of Beef at prices below those charged in the markets.

Large Melt Shad 30c
Also Roe Shad, Shad Roe and good variety of other Fish at Lowest Prices

Hot Cross Buns 15c dozen
if ordered will be delivered to you in time for breakfast Good Friday. We will have plenty of them

Read other side and save this card.
(OVER)

This is a good, clean little advertisement, and ought to get results. A card seems to me sure to make more impression than a circular, particularly than some circulars. It has more dignity, it holds together better, and in my judgment will in the long run do better work.

* * *

On the other side of the card appears the following, which I have simply had reset, not photographed:—

We quote below a number of articles on which we are overstocked at prices that are lower in some instances than the wholesale cost, and all are big values.

If these prices are as low as they are represented to be, the simple statement of them ought to get results. On the whole, Mr. Brayshaw is doing pretty good advertising, and if he takes care to get his cards in the right hands, I haven't the least doubt he is getting results from it right along.

* * *

I have another card before me, this one from the Victor Cash Grocery, of Camden, N. J. It is just about the same size as the other—4 x 6 inches. The printing is in red on a thin yellow board. I don't like this color combination at all. It looks a little flashy. My own personal taste is also against the yellow card. I have never seen any reason why these high colors should be used in connection with a retail grocery business. Some firms paint their store fronts vivid red or yellow and carry out the same color scheme in their advertising matter. I don't like it. They do it because they think it attracts attention. So it may sometimes, but it by no means follows that it is the sort of attention that it pays to attract. Good advertising can always be depended on to attract attention on its merits—not on account of its flashy color. If I were in charge of the Victor Cash Grocery's business I should use a better card for my advertising, and I should choose a different color. Neither yellow or red, but white or a decent blue or something like that. Then have the printing done in black. The effect will be more refined, it will be more respectable, it will be of a higher class, and because it has these qualities it will attract a great many people who will be repelled by this red and yellow circular.

On the face of this card appears simply the words: "To the Lady of the House. From Victor Cash Grocery" and the address. On the other side appears the following:—

If these are specials, all right. If they are not, the advertisement will have little or no results, because, as I have often explained, there is nothing persuasive about a price alone unless it is an obviously low price. I don't like the type the circular is set in. It is hard to read and does not invite the eye. Plain upright type is much better in every way.

New Orleans Molasses Confiscated by Government.

Eighteen barrels of molasses, the property of Penick & Ford, of New Orleans, La., and stored for some weeks at J. H. Poston's warehouse, Memphis, Tenn., were confiscated by the Federal authorities last week, the confiscation being ordered upon the discovery of a violation of the pure food law and being formally executed by J. B. Joplin, Deputy United States Marshall. The consignment of molasses seized by the Government was sent to Memphis some weeks ago for distribution. It was labeled as reboiled open kettle molasses, but the Government test showed that it was a compound and contained a big percentage of glucose. A violation of the pure food law is punishable by either confiscation, prosecution or both.

Points Involved in Kephart Test Case

Current Pennsylvania Dairy and Food Bulletin Describes Some of These in Detail. How State Chemist Found Canned Goods. Summary of Month's Investigations and Results.

The current number of the Dairy and Food Department's monthly bulletin contains the following further elucidation of the points to be worked out in the Kephart dried fruit test case which is now before the Blair County Court:—

First. Section 5, clause 5, provides that no food shall contain any substance that is poisonous or injurious to health. Provided, however, that nothing shall be deemed an adulteration that is not an adulteration within the meaning of the National Food and Drugs Act, enacted by Congress, and the rules and regulations promulgated from time to time for the enforcement of the same. The Dairy and Food Division contended that the effective part of the law is contained in the first clause; that all coming after the word "provided" is surplusage. Four hundred pages of these rules have been issued up to this time. Nor is the end yet. Besides, the officials who send them out announce that they do not have the force of law; that they are merely opinions, and that the only virtue in obeying them is to insure oneself against prosecution by the agents of the Federal Government. And then these rules are being constantly modified, reversed, superseded, so that they are like the weather in our northern country, in a constant state of change.

Section 8 provides that no prosecution shall be sustained against any retailer from whom a sample is obtained if the accused can establish a guarantee to the effect that the goods were not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the act, or within the meaning of the National Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906. The Dairy and Food Division contends that the first guarantee is all right, but that the requirement for the second or National guarantee is mere surplusage. It is contended that we don't know what is an adulteration or what is not under the National law and rules. Further, if the former is surplusage the reference to the National guarantee is surplusage also. In fact, it is claimed that the repeated references to the National act occurring throughout the act constitute nothing but surplusage. These references, all of which, it is claimed, are redundant, occur frequently in the State law.

Some weeks ago the department announced that its agents had collected from points all over the State a large number of samples of canned goods for examination by State chemists. No formal report of the results of this campaign have been published, but in the current bulletin Dr. H. C. Stiefel, State chemist in charge of the analyses, summarizes a part of the results as follows:—

On the whole, canned goods packers give fair value for the price asked for their wares. This was shown by the analysis of a large number of samples of various kinds of canned vegetables and meats made for the Dairy and Food Department by the writer. Tomatoes and corn, for instances, were packed solid without excessive water, the same with beans, peas, etc. In no case was any artificial coloring matter found; the tomatoes had their natural color, beans and peas were not greened artificially and but one sample of corn was found that had been bleached by the use of sulphur.

The artificial sweetener, saccharine, and the preservatives, salicylic acid, benzoic acid, etc., were not present in a single instance.

The canned meats were without borax and true to name, with but one exception, a canned potted ham containing four and one-half per cent. of starch. Starch was also present in varying quantities in the different "Pates" and "Loafs," but these two designations are like charity, they can cover a multitude of sins. A "Pigeon Pate" may contain more of the pigeon, or more starch, just as the packer sees fit to manufacture, while "Lamb Loaf" may contain much starch, more water and just enough lamb to entitle it to the name. A Vienna sausage may be composed of starch, water and meat in any proportions desired by the packer.

Sample bought of W. Weinfeld, 2556 Kensington avenue, Philadelphia. Sold for catsup. Chemist's report—Misbranded.

Quite a number of cases were reported in which retail grocers of Philadelphia, Pottsville and Pittsburg were prosecuted for selling misbranded catsup. In practically all of these cases the fines were paid by the manufacturers, who were liable upon their guarantees.

ASSOCIATION NEWS.

La Crosse, Wis.

The La Crosse (Wis.) Retail Grocers' Association has adopted the following resolution:—

Whereas, At a recent meeting of the Common Council of the city of La Crosse, his honor, Mayor W. A. Anderson, submitted a communication recommending the passage of an ordinance relating to the exposure of fruits, vegetables, meat, poultry and other foodstuffs in the city of La Crosse, prohibiting the placing of the same for sale when exposed on any sidewalk, in front or along the side of any building.

Resolved, By the Retail Grocers' Association of the city of La Crosse, in regular monthly meeting assembled, that we are heartily in favor of the recommendation of his honor, the Mayor, relating to the exposure of fruits, vegetables, meats, poultry and other foodstuffs; and be it further

Resolved, That we heartily extend our unanimous support to the Mayor and Common Council to procure the passage of an ordinance prohibiting the placing on sale on the sidewalks of fruits and vegetables and other foodstuffs, when exposed; and be it further

Resolved, That this ordinance be drawn to include peddlers and street hawkers who sell from wagons and push carts, that they also may be compelled to keep their goods covered.

Parcels Post Dead for This Session.

The Last Chance for the Passage of a Measure Opening the Mail to Packages at Low Rates is Defeated by a Point of Order.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 14, 1908.

The parcels post bills are dead for this session at least. The plan to secure a limited experimental parcels post came up again on Tuesday. Senator Burnham, of New Hampshire, offered an amendment to the Post-Office Appropriation Bill authorizing the Postmaster-General to establish an experimental parcels post system on rural routes in four counties of the United States. No appropriation was called for, as the expense would be so slight it could be borne by the contingent fund of the department. The amendment was sailing smoothly through until the point of order was made that it was new legislation, and consideration of it was blocked.

This kills all parcels post legislation this session. Several months ago Representative Lafean, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill providing for the inauguration of a parcels post system, to be confined to rural routes, but the Post-Office Committee of the House refused even to grant a hearing. Speaker Cannon is vigorously opposed to all such innovations as a parcels post. So are the express companies.

If the amendment had been adopted the Postmaster-General intended to select York County, in Mr. Lafean's district, as one of the four in which the parcels post experiment would have been made.

The Dog May Bite

Honestly, you will be much more likely to succeed by pushing Hotel Astor Coffee than by pushing a blend of your own.

We have been in coffee blending for many years. Obviously, we must know more about it than you do. And then Hotel Astor Coffee has been tried on the dog—the hardest dog to please in the United States—the patrons of the most exclusive hotels of New York City. The dog pronounced it good at once, and with the stamp of weighty approval upon it we offer it to you.

When you blend your own coffee the dog you try it on is your own customers—that's risky; the dog may bite.

A perfect blend of superfine coffee. For the very finest trade.

Good Job or Your Own Business.

Remember that real hot day two or three weeks ago when the thermometer got up to about 85?

I was out in Erie, Pa., that day. It was pretty hot. A lot of us old fellows who hadn't taken off our red flannels felt all stewed up.

I sat in the back part of one of the largest grocery stores in Erie waiting for the proprietor. After a while he came back and began to chew the rag.

"This is one of the days when I wish I had a good job somewhere and wasn't in business for myself," he grumbled.

"Why, d'ye feel the heat any more because you're in business for yourself?" I asked.

"Oh, no, not that," he answered, "but I feel the heat a lot anyway, and when a lot of other things come along at the same time to worry me I get all worked up."

"But it is a question in my mind," he went on, "whether any man ain't better off with a good job working for somebody else than he is with a business of his own. Take Jim out here—my head clerk. I pay him $18 a week. He's married, but has no children and he lives with his wife's people. It don't cost 'em much to live, and he can get along bully on $18. No matter whether business is good or not, no matter how rotten collections are, his little $18 comes to him every Saturday night, and he don't have to worry anything about it. I've got to do the worrying. Of course I want to get a little more out of it than $18 a week, but sometimes I don't, and have all the worry besides."

"How old is Jim?" I asked.

"Oh, he's somewhere short of 40," he replied.

"Well, suppose you live on, and Jim lives on, until he's 65 years old," I said. "He's not as spry as he was and can't watch things as close. By and by you notice that things aren't just going right—Jim's getting too old. What becomes of him? Are you going to keep him on? Not as head clerk—you can't; you'd like to, but you've got to think of the business. He has nothing but his 'good job,' and he's even lost his right to that. While you—you've got the solid ground of your business under you till you die. That's the point.

"Let me tell you something," I went on. "Just about fifteen years ago another grocer—he hadn't as big a store as yours—said exactly this same thing to me. He couldn't see, either, why a man with a good job wasn't better off. He was tired of worrying and fussing over things—bearing the whole burden—and getting only a good day's wages anyway. He went over the whole thing just like you have. A few months after that I heard that he had had a job offered him as salesman and had sold his store to his brother and taken it. Not long after that I saw him. He knew then he was right in thinking a good job better than his own business. He was making good on the road, was getting fair money, and he had nothing to worry over. The only thing he was sorry for was that he hadn't done it long before.

"I didn't see that man again until about a year. His line was different from mine and we covered different territories. I saw his sister one day on the street and she told me her brother was out of a job and hadn't been well. Wouldn't I go to see him? I went. He was then past sixty years old, and he looked it.

"'Hello, Ben, what's the trouble?' I said.

"Oh, a lot of things," he answered. "I ain't in very good shape, and then not having anything to do has worried me a lot."

"When did you get out?" I asked.

"About six months ago. I'd been with the same people I went with when I sold my store, you know. Just think, I was with them about fourteen years, and when I commenced to get old, and couldn't stand the work as well, I had to go. Still, they treated me well enough while I was with them. They treat their men more like horses than men, though; awful drivers. That's the reason I'm wore out."

"He got up to go across the room, and I was shocked by the poor old fellow's feebleness. His knees shook like a man's a hundred years old.

"What are you going to do, old man?" I asked.

"Try to get something else," he replied. "That's all I can do. I've got nothing; I must get something."

"So," I said to the Erie grocer, "if you have any fool idea of selling a business like this and going into somebody's employ, forget it. It's a mistake."

Poor old Ben! If I've thought about him once since I saw him, I've thought of him a hundred times.

A man past sixty, feeble, and old and sick—can't you see the fat jobs he'll get? I can see the poor old soul searching for 'em now—walking his sore old legs off, finding nowhere anybody who wants old men for anything.

But if he hadn't sold his business?

The job's all right while you can hold it. Under a whole lot of circumstances I'd rather have it than the responsibility of my own business.

But by and by you get too old for the job. You slip back. At last you're fired, kindly maybe, but still fired for a reason that even you can't dispute—incapacity.

Then's when the business you didn't want the responsibility of would have come in handy, eh?

THE STROLLER.

Slices Everything from 6-pound Knuckles to half-ounce Ends.

Johnson's Eversharp Slicer Makes Money for Mr. Potter. It will do the same for you MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., May 7, 1908.

MR. A. W. JOHNSON, New Brunswick, N. J.:

I have used one of your Eversharp dried beef slicing machines in my store for about eight months, cutting thousands of pounds of the finest beef sold in our city, and I wish to add a testimonial in behalf of the machine. It has never caused me one bit of trouble by being out of order or by having a dull blade. It is very simple to keep sharp and slices the beef in perfect shape, piling nice, thin slices up like so many sheets of paper. My customers remark to one another "I get the nicest shaved beef here of any place in the city." We can use up the ends very close, therefore saving quite a loss which we always had with other machines. The Eversharp is a perfect machine. Would not trade it for any other machine we have ever witnessed, even though they cost two or three times as much. It is a satisfaction to be able to sell moist beef shaved in tissue slices.

Yours truly, GEO. B. POTTER.

Window Dressing for Grocers

In this department from now on will appear each week suggestive articles regarding the proper use of the retail grocer's window. An endeavor will be made to deal with the subject practically, in other words, to show grocers how they can turn their windows into a money-making feature of their business. Subscribers are invited to make free use of the department by submitting both queries or suggestions.

A Dessert and Fancy Grocery Window.

A window which will display different canned fruits, olives, desserts, gelatines, etc., is described below:—

Cover the bottom of the window with green crepe paper.

Make a lattice work of strips of wood about an inch wide to run diagonally from the centre of the back to the ends of the front of the window.

Cover this lattice work with streamers of crepe paper, such as Dennison's always have for sale.

In each of the squares made by this lattice work hang small bottles of olives, pickles, capers, honey, etc., or packages of gelatine, Tryphosa, Jell-O, etc.

Pile your canned fruits, large olives, etc., on the bottom of the window. Put price tags on everything.

The sign should be put between the two lattices. This makes a very handsome window at small expense.

A Special Tea Window.

"The Stroller" certainly hit the mark some weeks ago when he wrote that article on "Robbers," and I believe the average grocer should try to sell better goods and stand up for his profit.

I know that there are very good men in the business to-day who do not try to sell high-grade goods or summer delicacies because it is too much work or some other reasons.

Here's a window dressing hint for the coming summer:—

Do you sell tea? If you don't, you should, and if you do, have you sold any for iced tea? Here is a chance to bring profit your way if you work it right

Have a couple of cards printed, one like this:—

> To introduce our Formosa Oolong tea With each ¼ lb. we give 1 lb. sugar free.

On the other have this:—

> One pound Sugar free
> With each quarter pound of Tea
> ————60 Cents Pound.————

Tell your customers that 60 cents is the price of the tea and that it is the finest you ever had for iced tea, and you want them to try it, hence you will for one week or one day (time is up to you) give a pound of sugar as a special offer to introduce it.

We have tried it and it was a success with us.

National Retail Grocers' Convention Meets in Boston.

all those questions will show that it is only for the protection of the 85 per cent. of the retail grocers who are in most instances their slaves.

The wholesalers are looking after their own interests, seeking to injure the other 15 per cent. who have by their energy and the vigor they displayed in learning their business and pushing only pure and full net weight goods, made their business a success; men who have minds of their own, who control their own business. They are the men the wholesalers seek to injure.

The wholesale grocery associations are worse than trades unions; they seek to protect the incompetent, the thriftless, the men who transact their business: "Come day, go day, God send Sunday," style.

It is claimed that there are about 300,000 retail grocers in this country, 15 per cent. of which would be about 20,000, and that there are about 3,000 so-called wholesalers. Take the 20,000 from the 300,000 and it leaves 280,000 retail grocers controlled by the wholesalers. What a contrast! Three thousand wholesale grocers controlling the trade of 280,000 retail grocers. Yet they are not satisfied; they want the other 20,000, who have taken themselves out of the power of the wholesalers.

The retail grocery trade a few years ago was looked upon as being about the lowest trade in the community. What caused it? Adulterations in all the goods they sold, spices made up from anything except the spice it was named from, cream of tartar without any cream of tartar in it, extracts of vanilla and lemon without any vanilla or lemon in them, nearly every article in the trade adulterated. Who was blamed for the adulterations? The retail grocer. Who should be blamed for it? The wholesale grocer who sold it, knowing what it was composed of, and the manufacturer who, at the order of the wholesale grocer, put up the stuff in order to meet the competition which they created themselves.

These are the men who have given the retail grocery trade a bad name, who now come and ask the manufacturers and producers of food products not to sell to the men who have made a success in the grocery business by pursuing a different policy.

What a power for good the 300,000 retail grocers could make themselves if they decided to act as a unit where their interests or the interests of any association of retail grocers were menaced. If in their organization they put aside all personal feeling, looking only to the interest of the country as a whole, demanding of the Legislatures of the cities, States and nation the enactment of laws which would protect all, discriminate against none, they will place the National, State and local organizations in such a position that they will command the respect and esteem of the entire country.

Immediately after this the delegates adjourned to Tremont Temple.

During the Tuesday session a telegram was received and read from Governor Chamberlain, of Oregon, inviting the association to hold its next convention in Portland, that State. R. J. Morris, of Colorado, also appealed for the 1909 meeting.

Three Canadian delegates were introduced and addressed the convention briefly. They were: E. M. Trowern, secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada; J. A. Beaudy, treasurer of the same organization, and A. P. Murray, a manufacturer from Montreal.

A number of the delegates from various States reported briefly on conditions there. All these were optimistic concerning the business and association outlook.

At the Tuesday session a letter was read from Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief Government chemist, regretting inability to be present, and promising to send one of his assistants instead. In his letter Dr. Wiley spoke as follows: "The grocers are a most powerful factor in the enforcement of the pure food law. They come in close contact with the consumer. When the consumer finds that he cannot get the high grade of articles at low grade prices he will conform to the conditions. The low grade prices will come in where the dealer may be overstocked with high grade goods and must unload quickly. If the grocer will acquaint the customer with all the facts concerning the products he will command his confidence. The crying evil of the trade to-day is the sale of articles as fresh when in fact they have been kept in cold storage a long time. There is no objection to cold storage; that is a blessing, but there is no reason why eggs, for instance, should be kept in cold storage a long time and then sold as fresh eggs. The dealer who prevents infection from flies does a great work in educating the community and attracting trade."

During the day reports on local conditions were received from S. W. Whitcomb, Maine; Fred. Fuller, Michigan; R. J. Morris, Colorado; F. T. Langley, Mississippi; F. J. Chinn, Missouri; John W. Lux, Minnesota; S. Kline, Oregon; David Gerow, Massachusetts; F. Rees Woodford, Tennessee; H. I. Meader, Washington, D. C.; J. B. Coningham, Nebraska; Charles Thorpe, New York; George F. Mitzer, Ohio; Mack Bergman, Texas; J. J. Crofton, Rhode Island; J. Higgins, Washington; Charles Wendell, Wisconsin; Norman H. Johnson, North Carolina; George P. Doyle, California, and Sol. Westerfield, Illinois.

Addresses were made at Tuesday afternoon's session by George B. Wason, president of the Massachusetts Wholesale Grocers' Association; L. J. Callanan, of New York, and E. M. Trowern, Dominion secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada.

President Wason said there is harmony between the wholesale grocers and retail grocers in Massachusetts, and he urged closer co-operation in order that together the wholesaler and retailer might save themselves from the unfair competition from the man who practices price cutting. Ninety per cent. of the trade now is controlled by the wholesale grocers and the remaining 10 per cent. should be brought into line.

During the Tuesday evening session George E. Greene, secretary of the Illinois State Retail Grocers' Association, delivered an address upon the duty of the National Association to introduce and impress legislation. His argument was in part as follows:—

> One of the objects of our organization is to oppose all National laws that are intended to aid or protect business monopoly which are or shall be a burden or an injury to the people, and aid in the passage of such laws as will provide the greatest common good, as the association in convention may declare. This gives a broad, comprehensive field for action. It puts our organization, as it were, both on the defensive and offensive, as the best interest of our organization as retail merchants and the public at large may warrant.
> Our great organization is composed of local and State organizations, forming them all into one great and powerful body. Each organization, be it local, State or National, has its distinct field for action. The purposes of a local organization are to accomplish that which is beyond the power, or, rather, impossible for the individual to cope with. The State association likewise, to accomplish that which an individual local organization is powerless to combat, and the National, as the big brother, stands as one to take up the broader problems which affect the collective States.
> The needs of the retailer are peculiar to himself. Very little legislation is inaugurated which is particularly intended to benefit him. As a class he must look for himself, but as he is individually weak, organization was formed to create an agency to look after his special need. If organization is to be effective and really accomplish the purposes it sets out to, as declared by its objects, it would naturally follow that it be the duty of those entrusted with carrying out the work of the association to cast about to find Senators or Representatives who will introduce for them the measures in which the organization is vitally interested, and see to it that they are placed upon the calendar for the consideration of our Federal Congress.
> The second thought of our topic, that of impressing legislation, follows as a natural consequence. We know that legislation is not secured by the mere asking, and herein is where the entire constituency must come into evidence. Experience has taught that thousands of measures are introduced for effect only, with no thought of their being enacted into law, and such events are made possible with what may be termed fatherless bills. After introduction, they become orphans, and die for want of care and nourishment. The greatest muscle-producing food and nerve stimulant which can be given a Congressman from any district is the will of the constituency being made known to him. A letter from home often has a magical effect. It has turned apathy into energy, indifference into championship, belligerency into docility. The more numerous the letters received by him from home, the more certain the transformation and the real power of the organization is made manifest. Were it not for the mass of letters, petitions, etc., from all parts of the United States in opposition to a parcels post, such a law would now disgrace our Federal statutes, and the retailer would be reaping the whirlwind. The same kind of effort finally brought the enactment of a pure food law, with a protective guarantee clause. These two instances serve but as an illustration of what it is desired to convey in this argument.
> The National Association should have some competent person to devote his entire time during the sessions of Congress, whose duty it should be to investigate all bills introduced and report the findings promptly to the proper officers of the National Association, and when action on any is required, the information should be speedily given out to the State and local associations.
> The impressing of legislation is clearly a function of the National Association, but this does not, as with the inauguration, lie principally with the officers, but with the laity as well. There must, in this instance, be a hearty co-operation and support. No doubt it will appear to some that the suggestion that some agent be employed to safeguard legislation in the interest of our organization involves the thought of finance and the resources of the National Association. Some might think that such a duty should be performed by the secretary; but before requesting this duty from him, let us consider what it means to follow the 28,000 or more bills introduced in the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, not only by title, but the contents. The title does not always convey the interest which the retailer may have in the bill.
> The National Association must stand as the promulgator and defender of the rights and best interests of the retailer, advocating the uplift and improvement of business conditions, promoting harmony, abating trade abuses, etc., and owes a duty to its members to inaugurate and impress legislation.

The entire day's session on Wednesday was devoted to pleasuring, the delegates being the guests of a local coffee house.

The address by George B. Wason, president of the Massachusetts Wholesale Grocers Association, on the disturbance in the relations of wholesaler and retailer was heard with close attention. Mr. Wason in part spoke as follows:—

I assure you, the members of the Boston Wholesale Grocers' Association are anxious to help in every way to make this meeting a grand success. There exists the best of feeling between the Boston Wholesale Grocers' Association and all retail associations; we work shoulder to shoulder to bring about better conditions of trade. We have learned by experience that "in union there is strength." We see that there are four classes that enter into this business and all must work in harmony. The four are the manufacturer, the wholesaler, the retailer and the consumer. We are all entitled to a living, and there is plenty of room for us all. We want to be fair with one another. The manufacturer has his troubles and we must try and help him. The retail grocer has his trials, and they are many. It is our duty to assist him all we can; he is our customer and our friend. Without him, we cannot sell our goods.

We want better laws to protect our brother grocers; we want to stop the unjust persecution of our fellow grocer, because some manufacturer fails to comply with the law; we want that manufacturer fined instead of the innocent retail grocer, who has troubles enough of his own to look out for, without looking to see if the goods are branded according to law. We want to get nearer to each other on a broad plane, where we can help one another. We have a common interest, and there are a great many things we can accomplish together we could not accomplish alone. I have seen some of our best retail grocers go to the wall, putting all of their time in trying to buy things for less than the cost to manufacture.

I tell you to look after the selling end of your business and you will see your profits increase. See that you do not sell goods less than it costs to do business. You are entitled to a profit and the people are willing to pay you one. Let us try to promote harmony among ourselves. Do not think you can kill your neighbor by cutting prices, but remember one thing; you must have a profit yourself, to live.

There are a few who think they can buy cheaper than anyone else, and they think they can do business for less than their brother grocer. Can you, as grocers, afford to push the goods of the manufacturer who sells 10 per cent. of your number direct at 10 per cent. less than you can buy? In other words, the manufacturer who discriminates against 85 or 90 per cent. of you? These 10 per cent. are cutting prices all the time. The so-called wholesale and retail grocers are buying at wholesale and selling at wholesale to the consumer. Just stop for a minute and see the effect of this class. They demoralize the manufacturer's goods by advertising them as low as the retail grocer can buy them. This makes 90 per cent. of the trade sore, and they sell just as few of them as they can. They think they can eliminate the wholesaler and save his profits for himself—but not for the consumer—so 10 per cent. of the retail grocers are going to put 90 per cent. of you and all of the wholesale grocers of this country out of business,, just to benefit the consumer. Are you going to stand by and let this philanthropist go ahead in his mad career? And is the wholesale grocer going to lie down and be put out of business? Well, I guess not. There is too much money interested in the grocery business to allow this thing will happen.

Now, what is the remedy? It is to have the manufacturer put every dollar's worth of his goods through the legitimate wholesale grocers. Then we can control these would-be benefactors. The wholesale grocer is your friend, always was and always will be, and he wants you to make a living profit. If it is left to us we will see that the goods are sold to you so you can make a profit.

The two associations ought to be so closely allied that if A was cutting the price of soap you could get at the wholesaler and he, in turn, could inform the retailer that he must stop cutting.

This Bill Will Greatly Change Apple Business

Provides for Grades of Quality and Standard Size Packages. Introduced in Congress by International Apple Shippers' Association.

Special correspondence of "Grocery World."

Washington, D. C.,
May 14, 1908.

A praiseworthy and in some respects unique bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. Porter, one of the members from New York State. It is fathered by the International Apple Shippers' Association and is intended to regulate the packing, shipping and sale of apples.

The bill provides that the standard measure of capacity for all apples packed in barrels shall be as nearly as may be, three bushels, the barrel to be of no less dimensions than 17⅛-inch head, length of stave 28½ inches, with bulge circumference not less than 64 inches, outside measurement.

Barrels of the above described capacity and dimensions shall be marked "standard barrel." Any barrel of less dimensions and capacity shall be marked in a plain and indelible manner, both on side and top, in letters not less than one inch long, "short barrel," or with the capacity in bushels or fraction thereof, or if one-half the capacity or dimensions of a standard barrel it shall be plainly marked "one-half barrel."

It provides that the standard measure of capacity for all apples packed in boxes shall be the heaped bushel, containing as nearly as may be 2,564 cubic inches, and of no less capacity than would be contained in a box of the following dimensions: 18½ by 12 by 11½ inches, inside measurement. Boxes of the above described capacity or dimensions shall be marked "standard box."

Any box of less dimensions or capacity shall be marked in a plain and indelible manner, both on side and top, in letters not less than one inch long, "Short Box," or with the fractional part of a bushel it may contain.

The standard measure of capacity for all apples packed in baskets shall be the heaped bushel, containing 2,564 cubic inches, and other baskets shall be marked "short," etc.

The act also provides for specific and definite grading of apples. "No. 1" grade and quality shall consist of healthy, well-grown apples of one variety, sound, of not less than 2½ inches in diameter, and of good color for the variety, of normal shape and not less than 90 per cent. free from scab, worm holes, bruises and other defects, and properly packed.

"No. 2" grade and quality shall consist of apples of not less than nearly medium size for the variety, healthy, and not less than 85 per cent. free from scab, worm holes, bruises and such other defects as cause material waste, and properly packed.

The Secretary of Agriculture is given charge of the enforcement of the bill, and is given authority to appoint a Green Fruit Commissioner. The Commissioner will charge the shipper for his services, at a rate not to exceed 5 cents per barrel and 2½ cents per box. The minimum charge for his services, however, shall be $2.50.

Any person who wilfully alters, effaces or obliterates wholly or partially any of the official marks shall be liable to a fine of not less than 25 cents, and not more than $5 for each package upon which the marks have been so altered, effaced or obliterated; and, further,

The person on whose behalf any apples are packed, sold or offered for sale shall be prima facie liable for the violation of the act.

HOLT.

Another striking address was by Charles W. Burrows, vice-president of the National Board of Trade, on parcels post. Mr. Burrows very severely attacked the Postmaster-General's mail recommendations. The parcels post, he said, would puncture a big hole in the United States Treasury, creating an enormous deficit. The mail-order houses, one of which did a business of $52,000,000 last year, are thriving by the "iniquitous, damnable postal laws" already in force, and what would happen if the mails were opened to cheap transportation of merchandise? The amendment to limit the privileges of parcels post to persons who are legal residents on the rural free delivery routes, and the further provision that it shall not be open to persons acting as agents for others were said to be ineffective and probably unconstitutional. Hence it would not be long before Congress would have to broaden the privilege and extend it to all. Like the rural free delivery it would become expensive far beyond the estimates. The rural free delivery will cost the Government $36,000,000 next year when the revenue will not be more than $6,000,000, a loss to the Government of $30,000,000 in one year.

That precious village life, so ideal and dear to the country, would be destroyed by the parcels post; the country merchants would have to go. It is too dangerous to try, he said.

The most important business transacted at Thursday's session was the adoption of the following resolution after a sharp debate:—

> Resolved, That the National Association of Retail Grocers urges upon all manufacturers of the United States who market their goods under proprietary brands or trade-marks, the wisdom of the policy of establishing and maintaining by contract, at a reasonable profit, at which their products shall be sold, such policy to be established according to the conditions of trade in the different localities in the United States of America. We are opposed to any price being printed on the package.

As stated, the passage of this resolution, which was done by a vote of 140 to 22, was only accomplished after much discussion, which at times approached acrimony. Representatives of various manufacturers interested in the disposition of the question were present, and by lobbying they helped the controversy along.

There was also some friction over the election of officers, but it was smoothed out, and C. J. Kramer was re-elected president and John A. Green secretary. H. W. Schwab was also re-elected treasurer without opposition. The vice-presidency went to T. P. Sullivan, of New York.

One of the addresses on the last day was by Dr. Frederick L. Dunlap, associate chemist of the Bureau of Chemistry at Washington. The speaker told nothing particularly new about the operations of the law, but emphasized the difficulties in the way of its enforcement.

Subsequent to this address the Committee on Credentials reported the presence of 155 delegates. Secretary George E. Green, of Illinois, reported that the secretaries of the several State organizations had organized with George E. Green as president, and Ira B. Thomas, of Iowa, secretary, and chosen a committee to draft rules. The organization had also voted to recommend that a complete record be made of every member of each State and local association. He also reported a recommendation for the adoption of a uniform system of application for credit and that no credit be given to anyone who should not file such application.

Treasurer H. W. Schwab reported receipts of $4,800.92, expenditures of $3,252.75, and bills due $974.50. A deficit of $228.33 was reported. This was raised at once by contributions from the various State delegations.

Some stir was occasioned by the address of J. J. Higgins, of Washington, on "The Manufacturer Making and Maintaining the Retail Selling Price." The manuscript of this address could not be obtained in time to go forward with the last day's news. [It may appear next week.—Ed.]

The last business was the adoption of resolutions. Several were rejected, but those which got through were as follows:—

Whereas, The erection of beet sugar factories has added greatly to the prosperity of the merchants and farmers wherever the industry has been established; and

Whereas, The territory in which sugar beets thrive extends from ocean to ocean; and

Whereas, The home production of beet sugar during the past ten years has grown from 40,000 to 480,000 tons; and

Whereas, The nation is still sending $100,000,000 abroad annually for the purchase of sugar which we are amply able to produce at home; and

Whereas, The contemplated free importation of sugar produced at a wage rate of 10 to 25 cents per day has stopped the erection of new beet sugar factories, which cannot secure labor at less than $1.50 to $2 per day;

Therefore, We urge the Congress of the United States to allow no further reduction to these tropical islands, which abound with cheap labor, the chief factor in the cost of sugar production.

Whereas, The present United States oleomargarine law has operated to divert the distribution of a meritorious and wholesome product from its legitimate channel of trade, to wit, the grocery store, to the injury of the retail grocers throughout the land; and

Whereas, Said law has seriously injured the business of the retail grocers; and

Whereas, Said law has operated to degraud the Government of the revenue tax amounting to many hundreds of thousands of dollars; and

Whereas, Under the operation of said law there has arisen a large class of unscrupulous parties handling olcomargarine by evading the Government tax; and

Whereas, Said law as it now stands on the statute books places a premium upon crime and offers a large reward for the practice of fraud, with a small risk; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association does hereby urge upon the Congress of the United States the repeal of the present law taxing oleomargarine, as this tax falls upon the consumer and it is in reality a pernicious protection to a combination of creamery butter manufacturers as against the legitimate sale and distribution of a wholesome article of food; and be it further

Resolved, That we recommend the enactment of such legislation as will allow the honest dealer to sell oleomargarine in original packages of one, two, three or five-pounds for just what it is without any discriminating tax; and be it further

Resolved, That every member of the National Retail Grocers' Association be, and he is hereby requested to immediately write to his Representative and to the Senators of his State requesting them to use their influence towards the repeal of the present unjust and pernicious oleomargarine law.

Whereas, It is the common practice to pack and weigh pork products, especially pork loin, in heavy wrappings and mark weights without proper allowanee for shrinkage; and

Whereas, The retailer is expected and obliged to purchase at marked weights regardless of the fact that there is an average loss in weight of from one to five pounds per 100-pound case; therefore

Resolved, That we petition the packer and wholesale dealer and insist that pork products be weighed without wrappings; that proper allowance be made for shrinkage and weight marks to be guaranteed, to the end that the retailer may purchase at actual net weight and be protected from injustice and loss.

Whereas, Under present conditions employees of the United States Government are exempt from garnishment or attachment proceedings; and

Whereas, There are a large number of persons in the employment of the Government who by reason of their position can, if they see fit, avoid the payment of their just obligations; and

Whereas, This is contrary to the principles of the American people; and

Whereas, President Roosevelt has endeavored to compel honesty in the Government departments; therefore be it

Resolved, That the National Association of Retail Grocers of the United States, representing over 150,000 merchants, in convention assembled, at Boston, Mass., May 14, 1908, earnestly request President Roosevelt to issue or cause to be issued an executive order to all Government departments requiring Government employees to pay not less than 10 per cent. of their monthly salary upon all bills for necessaries of life incurred while in the service upon which complaint has been made.

Whereas, Persistent agitation in favor of the establishment in this country of a "carrying system" for parcels under the direction of the Post-office Department is being urged in many directions; and

Whereas, The enactment of such law would materially injure the commercial interests of the country at large; and be it

Resolved, That the National Association of Retail Grocers in convention assembled urge upon Congress to defeat any legislation that foisted upon the country any parcels post measure.

Whereas, Bills providing that food products shall bear the date of packing have been, and still are, frequently introduced and considered by the legislatures of the various States; and

Whereas, For the reasons hereinafter set forth, such measures are deemed by us to be neither necessary nor reasonable nor just; it is hereby

Resolved, That the members of this association are opposed to the enactment of all State and Federal legislation that shall require the declaration on the label of food products of any kind of the date when such articles were prepared or packed; and further

Resolved, That the secretary of this association be, and he is hereby requested, when proposed State or Federal legislation of this character shall come to his notice and whenever occasion shall require to communicate with the various members hereof, asking them to communicate with the legislators who represent them in the Congress or in their State Legislatures, and otherwise to co-operate in opposing such bills; and further

Resolved, That our secretary be, and is hereby authorized and directed, whenever in the discretion of himself or of the other officers or directors of the association it shall seem necessary, on behalf of the association, to communicate with the committees of the Federal or of the several State Legislatures having such bills in charge, and to request them to grant a hearing to the National Association of Retail Grocers or to its members chiefly affected before the measures are reported for passage by such committees; and in conclusion it is

Resolved, That the National Retail Grocers' Association holds legislation of the kind mentioned to be unwise.

A resolution was also adopted commending to retail grocers manufacturers who maintain a reasonable retail margin of profit upon all goods distributed by them; also a resolution condemning the buying of futures and free deals.

The convention ended with a banquet Thursday evening.

Arbuckles Establish Important New Department.

Will Sell High Grade Roasted Coffees Direct to Wholesale Grocers. Heretofore have Sold Only Low Grade Roasted.

The latest move by Arbuckle Bros., the coffee people, is attracting some attention. Heretofore they have sold roasted only the lower grades of coffee. Within the past week they have announced a new department in which they will sell roasted coffee of the higher grades. The headquarters of the new department will be New York City.

In establishing the new department the Arbuckles go over the head of the large jobbing buyer of green coffee, to whom they have sold these grades exclusively up to this time. Heretofore Arbuckle Bros. have sold green coffee to large jobbers who were exclusively coffee merchants and who bought green coffee from such concerns as the Arbuckles and sold again to wholesale grocers, sometimes roasted, sometimes green. With the new department now established Arbuckle Bros. will go out to wholesale grocers with its own roasted coffee.

Beet Sugar Refiners Have Prosperous Year.

Figures presented at the annual meeting of the stockholders of the American Beet Sugar Co. held in Jersey City on Tuesday give the net profits for the twelve months ending March 31st at $1,695,149, an increase of $482,816, and surplus after the preferred dividend at $638,311, an increase of $486,829. The net surplus amounts to $638,311, which has been applied to working capital, which now amounts to $1,307,000. Included in the general expenses is an item of $354,055, the cost of depreciation and repairs, indicating that the plant has been well maintained.

EVERY ONE A GOOD CHANCE.

No. 313.—In heart of Philadelphia's most aristocratic residential district. Store 22 x 60. Does $500 weekly, half cash, balance monthly. The people who buy at this store are the promptest payers in the city. Stock $2,000-$3,000, net profits 20 per cent., owing to the fact that customers are mostly wealthy. Owner going to the country and will sell at inventory. This store is a little old-fashioned in some respects, but is thoroughly prosperous and can be very greatly increased.

No. 314.—In Ocean County, N. J. Summer resort, but good winter population also. General store, 40 x 75 feet. Doing $30,000 yearly, half cash, balance strict 30 days. Present stock $5,000, but can be reduced to $2,500 without impairing business. Uses two teams. Net clear 10 per cent. Balance of building divided into flat and offices, profitably rented. Owner retiring from business and will sell at inventory.

No. 326.—In West Philadelphia, store 17x32 feet. Does $350 to $450 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Stock $400 to $500. One team. Good house connected. Net profits 15 per cent. Owner retiring from grocery business, and will sell at inventory. This store has been established 20 years, and is solidly prosperous.

No. 329.—In Germantown, Philadelphia. Does $300 weekly, all cash. Stock about $1,000. No team. Nets clear 10 per cent. This business sells only groceries. The meat department is rented to another dealer on profitable terms, which make advertiser's rent very low. Owner has other business which takes his time. Price inventory.

No. 333.—General store in Mifflin County, Pa. An extremely strong proposition. Size 30x100 feet. Business about $4,000 per month, 40 per cent. cash. Stock $6,000, which can be reduced considerably. Uses two teams. Business thoroughly profitable, netting about $5,000 per year. Owner in poor health and wants to retire to country place. Will make very favorable terms. Low price for fixtures. Stock at inventory, with proper allowance for everything not strictly up to the mark. The business can be very decidedly increased.

No. 336.—On best business street of West Philadelphia. Store 16x27 feet. Does $150 to $200 weekly, all cash. Stock about $700. No team delivery. Clears 20 per cent. as expenses are low. Good dwelling connected for sale or rent. Good reasons which will be fully explained. Price inventory.

No. 345.—In West Philadelphia. Meats and provisions. Size 15x28 feet. Does about $11,000, three-fourths cash. Mostly sells meats, so stock only averages $250. No team. Actual net profits, 20 per cent. Owner wishes to change business, for reasons which will be explained. Price inventory. Take around $800. Dwelling.

No. 346.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats, provisions. Size, 16 x 30. Does $200 to $250 weekly, three-quarters cash, balance weekly. Stock about $500. Push cart delivery. Net profits 12 per cent. Low rent and expenses. Satisfactory reasons for selling. Price inventory. For stock and fixtures about $1,200 required. This is an extremely strong small proposition.

No. 347.—In high class part of West Philadelphia. Meats, provisions, canned goods, etc. Size, 22x60. Does $500 weekly, all cash Stock $300 to $350. One team. Clear net profits 15 per cent. Rent, $30 monthly. Pay roll, $21 weekly. No real estate. Owner wants to get in other business and will sell at inventory. Cost about about $1,000, without team.

No. 353.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries and provisions. Size, 16 x 30 feet. Does $14,000 yearly, two-thirds cash. Dwelling connected. Stock, $1,000 to $1,500. No team. Net profits, 10 per cent. Owner wants to go further into suburbs and will sell at inventory or lump sum of $1,500. Splendid chance for adding meats.

No. 356.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 36 feet. Does $400 weekly, two-thirds cash, balance weekly. Dwelling connected, if wanted. Stock about $800. Uses one team. Nets clear 10 per cent. Owner needs a rest and his eyesight is failing. Will sell at inventory. Will take about $1,000.

No. 360.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 17 x 30 feet. Does $400 to $500 weekly, half cash, balance weekly and monthly. Stock, $600. Owner takes out $40 weekly, beside living expenses. Uses one team. Good dwelling attached. Owner is going into the saloon business and will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,000. This is a splendid money-making proposition.

No. 362.—Near Tioga, Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 20 x 30 feet. Does $425 weekly, half cash. Stock, $1,000. Clean net profits, 15 per cent. Dwelling connected for sale. Owner has Government position and cannot give attention. Will sell at inventory. Will take around $1,500 for stock and fixtures and around $2,500 for the property. Full investigation.

No. 363.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Store 17 x 38 feet. Does $17,000 to $18,000, two-thirds cash. Stock $500. Net profits 10 per cent. Good 10-room dwelling connected for sale. Uses one team. Owner has seashore hotel and wants to give it his whole time. Take $2,500 on the property and inventory for stock and fixtures. Established 10 years ago and a very successful business.

No. 365.—In West Philadelphia. Groceries, meats and provisions. Size, 18 x 30 feet. Does $350 to $400 weekly, three-quarter cash, balance weekly. Nets clean 10 per cent. above everything. Stock about $900. This store was established seven years ago and is thoroughly prosperous and profitable. The present owner bought it our months ago. He wanted a certain ice cream store which the owner refused to sell and he then bought this store. The ice cream store is now for sale, and as the owner of the grocery prefers that business he wants it if he can get it. Will sell at inventory. Will take all told about $1,600. Fullest investigation.

In all of these the cause of selling is good, and the fullest investigation courted. Every one paying.
